INFLUENCE OF WHOLESALERS AND JOBBERS.

The following address was delivered by James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner of Pennsylvania, before the Wholesale Grocers' Association of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, in Eighth Annual Convention at the Hotel Adelphia, Philadelphia, March 11th, 1914.

Gentlemen:—I do not think this occasion is one on which it would be desirable for me to discuss policies so far as concerns the department of Government with which I am connected; hence, in this brief address, I will talk very little shop.

As I look over this gathering of representatives of the great commercial interests, I cannot help but think of the vast commercial changes that, within a generation, have taken place within our country. Of these changes, you are at once the product and the exponent. Your business, to a large extent, was born of the requirements of modern social life, but in the economy of society, you are now indispensable—just as much so as the telephone, telegraph, fast freight and express, modern postal facilities, rapid transportation, and all of the other necessities of modern life. You are, in fact, the pushing, throbbing, vital force of modern business. Your occupation is to make business, exploit business, get business, and do business. Much of the activity in the modern business world is due to the vital force which is added to business by the wholesalers and jobbers of our country, the so-called middle men. In these latter days a cry has gone up over the country for a reduction of the cost of living, and great criticism has been brought of modern business methods, because of the alleged waste caused by the methods of handling commodities from the producer to the ultimate consumer. Whatever of additional cost there is by reason of the middle-man and the system of distribution of necessaries of life, this at least is true, that under modern conditions of society, the elimination, or attempted elimination, of the middle-man, is not only impracticable, but, if possible, would retard the wheels of business, require social reconstruction, and be a step backward in the advancement of the race. If it be true that the handling of, say, food products, from the producer to the jobber or wholesaler, thence to the retailer, and thence to the consumer, adds largely to the cost of food, yet this additional cost has its equivalent, and more than its equivalent, in convenience, in the protection and preservation of the quality of the food, and in the protection to the public health thereby. There is no force anywhere in existence that so much and to such an extent, operates to secure to the people purity and wholesomeness in the food consumed by the public, as the wholesalers and jobbers of the United States. There is nowhere a body of men who have aided more in the enforcement of the food laws of the several states and of the nation, than have the wholesalers and jobbers of this country. They have done this by studying the requirements of the food laws and then by insisting and compelling the manufacturers of the country to comply therewith. Most of the infractions of food laws now are in relation to foods that are either produced locally, and thus pass directly from the producer to the retailer, or else are of the class of foods that pass directly from the manufacturer to the retailer and do not pass through the hands of the wholesaler or jobber.

As an officer having in charge the enforcement of the food laws in the State of Pennsylvania, I have found at all times that the wholesale dealers and jobbers of the country have, almost without exception, sought honestly and in good faith, to uphold and comply with all of the food laws and regulations adopted thereunder. There have been differences between us in reference to the enactment of legislation and as to the form that such legislation should take, but after legislation has once been enacted, there has been shown a commendable disposition on the part of the wholesaler and jobber to aid in the enforcement of the law. Your association has, therefore, been a potent influence in conserving the public health and in the bringing about of honest dealing as to the commodities which your members handle.

But the influence of your association has been much wider reaching. As I look into your faces, I cannot help but think what a potent influence, not only in the commercial life of the people, but in their political and social thought, has been, and is being wielded by the members of your association and the traveling salesmen representing your houses. We have an idea in these modern days that our government is made by the newspapers, and there is no doubt that the great magazines and great metropolitan newspapers do wield a tremendous influence in making and unmaking our rulers, passing our laws, and, sometimes, in construing and enforcing them. But however potent in the political world is the power of the public press, it is almost matched by the force and power that I see before me. If a political leader in a state or nation could enlist under his banner the army of business and traveling salesmen which you represent and send forth this army to use the push, force and fire of its individuals in spreading his doctrine or promoting his cause, I am persuaded that the public press would have to look to its laurels. You reach and touch every remote village and hamlet, every city and town, and, if you so desire, can sow therein seeds of political discord and unrest. Through your commercial travellers you can ascertain quickly and reliably the public thought, and in most cases you might, if you saw fit, mold that public thought by the influence stated. You breathe sentiment over a wide territory. You catch the political drift where it is not influenced by local current or eddy. Standing shoulder to shoulder for any cause, I know of nowhere of any more potent influence than the wholesalers and jobbers of the country with their army of traveling salesmen.

Turning now from politics and business, I want to congratulate you upon the place that you have made for yourselves in the modern social life of the nation. This position has not been attained, except with struggle and with earnest endeavor to make your business not only profitable to yourselves, but indispensible to the people of your country. We usually get in this world what we deserve, and the success of your business has been deserved by the intelligence and energy which you have put into it and the desire you have always shown for business, honor and integrity, and a course of square dealing with your fellow men.

I desire to congratulate your association on the progress you have made and to bespeak for you in the future still greater efficiency and success.

In conclusion, I thank you sincerely for your invitation to be present on this occasion.

PROSECUTIONS ORDERED DURING FEBRUARY.

The fact that the month of February contained three fewer days than January does not wholly account for the decrease in the number of prosecutions, as compared with its immediate predecessor. January witnessed the ordering of sixty-four prosecutions for various offenses against the laws and the health of the people of Pennsylvania; in February but twenty-two prosecutions were ordered.

There was a single prosecution under the oleomargarine act. It was for selling the product by wholesale without first having taken the precaution to secure a wholesale license. This offense occurred in Philadelphia.

Under the cold storage products act two prosecutions were ordered. One was in Erie, the other in Philadelphia. The first was for selling butter not properly marked, the second for selling fish not properly marked.

Under the Vinegar law four prosecutions were ordered. The offenses were committed in Bucks, Chester and Montgomery counties. They were for selling cider vinegar, a distilled vinegar colored with caremel for cider vinegar, 2 cases; cider vinegar, a solution of apple solids and acetic acid 2.

Under the milk acts there was one prosecution for selling milk low in solids, watered; one low in fact and solids skimmed; watered, three. Erie, Philadelphia, Washington and Westmoreland counties furnished the cases.

Under the non-alcoholic act the following prosecutions were ordered: Cream soda, sweetened with saccaharin, 1; orange soda, sweetened with saccharin, 1; orange soda, misbranded, 1; raspberry syrup, misbranded, 2, a total of 5. The prosecutions were brought in Chester and Schuylkill counties.

The other prosecutions ordered, 5 in number, were under the general food act and were for selling as follows: Boiling beef, partially decomposed, wholly unfit for food, 1; mushrooms, canned, misbranded as to weight, 1; cups of coffee containing chickory or similar substances high in reducing sugars, 3.

Making a total of 22, or less than one a day. Let us hope this fine record will be maintained throughout the year. These suits were brought in Allegheny, Berks, Clearfield and Montgomery counties.

WHY YIELDS MUST INCREASE.

From the Country Gentlemen:

A prominent business observer who has studied agricultural conditions in America and abroad recently stated that ninety per cent. of our farmers have made money during the past decade not so much by farming as by realizing upon the increase in the price of land. He announced his firm conviction that were the facts available they would show that most farmers were operating at a loss if we deduct the increase in value of land.

A review of the rapid increase in land values as shown by the census gives some support to his idea. In 1910 the value of land showed an increase of 118.1 per cent., while buildings and improvements increased only 77.8 per cent. Land increased much faster in value than the improvements. Viewing the situation from the standpoint of the individual farm a similar increase is evident. The average value per farm was $3,523 in 1890, $3,563 in 1900, and—note the increase—$6,444 in 1910. Per acre it was $25.81 in 1890, $24.37 in 1900, and—$46.64 in 1910.

Such increases in values are not fully realized except when land changes hands. Then the new owner is forced to charge himself interest upon the increased capital or, if he has borrowed money, he must reckon it as a positive expense. The increase in value chiefly affects the purchaser of these lands. It is a burden which the beginner must bear. The recent surveys of fertile sections in Indiana, Illinois and Iowa show that landlords are receiving about three and a half per cent. on their investments, so the outlook is by no means dark. But the next generation must produce better farmers than the last.

The new farmer on land that has increased 100 per cent. in value must be capable of increasing the net returns from his lands nearly 100 per cent. if he is to succeed.

SELLING FISH ALIVE IN COPENHAGEN.

One of the unusual sights in the city of Copenhagen is the water tank on wheels, which goes about from house to house to supply customers with fresh fish. The city's sewers used to empty into the sea at the nearest convenient point. Now the sewage is collected into a main trunk line and carried out into the sea some distance before it is released. This not only puts an end to the sewer nuisance, but enables boats full of live fish to come closer to shore and right into town by means of the salt water canals.

In this manner at least the smaller fish are kept alive until the moment they are sold. Any number of wooden boats are pierced with holes and float on the surface of the water, and the living fish are taken out of them when wanted.

But as everyone cannot go to the water's edge to buy fish there are the water tanks on wheels and the live fish are brought to the doors of the houses. The principal fish market was built by the municipality and is let to a wholesale fish salesman.

There is no spreading of fish on slabs so that dust and dirt may settle on them. Very pretty little tanks are filled with running water and there the smaller fish swim about. The larger fish, such as cod and halibut, are too cumbersome to keep alive and are therefore placed in cold storage rooms.

THE SITUATION.

Creamery Journal:—Whenever there is dancing someone has to pay the fiddler. For the past six or eight years the dairy farmers of the United States have been dancing around with an independent air, saying: "If our cream doesn't suit you let it alone." The farmer has been educated by competition to believe that cream a week old was just as good as that one day old and he has been getting just as much for it.

The farmer has been warned and the buyers of cream have been warned against such practices but they have plunged headlong into what we are facing today—a market good only for those who are making fancy butter. A market which is returning from 4 to 10c. less for undergrades. And all market centres are flooded with under grades. There has been so much poor butter thrown onto the markets, due to the poor cream evil, that the consuming public have been turned against poor butter. Then Fate takes a hand and removes the tariff on butter, which allows foreign goods to come in and compete with our poor grades.

As a result of these influences, the market has been driven to an extremely low price for January. The open winter and abnormal supply, it is true, have added coals to the fire, but the chief cause of our present low prices is poor butter. Farmers whined when asked why they did not support their local creamery. They said they couldn't afford to milk their cows and sell their butterfat for less than 35 to 40 cents. What will they do now with butter worth from only 26 to 33c? There are only two things that can be done. One, and the first thing, is to produce and deliver a better quality of cream. The other is to weed out the 150 pound cows and get herds of 400, 500 and 600-pound cows. When these two things have been done, foreign butter will go begging in America and once more our dairy farmers will enjoy higher prices for their product.

The democratic administration and the tariff are being blamed for present conditions, but they have had the least concern. Poor cream is entirely responsible.

We are not pessimistic, as a rule, but looking ahead we see two quite well defined paths. One is a continuation of our present direction, where await low prices, abandonment of the dairy cow, and accompanying low prices of farm lands.

The other path is equally well defined. We see a general reform of present methods. We see close discrimination in quality; we see poor cream turned down at our creameries; we see the quality of American butter raised so high that substitutes will not be considered as competition; we see testers and daily records in every cow-barn; pure bred sires owned by individuals and co-operative creamery companies; silos everywhere and 500-pound cows common.

ILLEGALLY LABELED INSECTICIDES.

From the report of the Department of Agriculture, it is readily observed that many of the firms making insecticides and bugicides are marketing their product with faulty labels and have come under the notice of the government. The Bulletins of the Agricultural Department show that practically all the judgments rendered constituted prosecutions of this kind. This work on the part of the government again demonstrates the absolute necessity and greater care and honesty in the marketing of this and all other classes of products, and now that we have the new label and publicity laws greater care and precaution must be taken by the manufacturer for the preservation of his reputation as a legitimate manufacturer.

To those who market fraudulent preparations there, of course, can be no advice or sympathy. A number of the firms who have fallen into the government dragnet upon insecticides and bugicides have had their preparations on the market for years. And it is chiefly through carelessness on their part that a revision of their labels has not been made prior to this campaign.

Through the passage of the various federal laws upon the marketing, not only of this class of preparations, but drug and food products, all come to a realization that they have a moral as well as a commercial and financial duty to perform as manufacturers, and that is, to adhere to an honest policy with reliable goods.

PUBLIC OPINION LARGELY DOMINATES THE RETAIL GROCER.

Burton H. Albee contributes the following article to a recent issue of the Grocers' Review:

Few retail dealers and their employes realize the power of public opinion, even in the affairs which seem to concern them alone. It would not be considered probable at first thought that the public would determine how retail dealers should manage their stores, yet in numerous instances it will be found that the public does have a good deal to say. In truth it may be laid down almost as a fact that ultimately the attitude of the public toward a store will, in a great degree, determine its policy.

In one of the cities of the east last summer the Wednesday half holiday worked so well that the clerks of the grocery stores and butchers formed an organization and circulated petitions asking for the stores be kept closed Wednesday afternoons the year around. After numerous meetings and discussions the matter was finally adjusted to the satisfaction of the clerks, and the Wednesday afternoon holiday was inaugurated to last the year through.

It worked very well up to the time of the Christmas rush, and then because both Christmas and New Years were on Thursday, it was necessary to keep open Wednesday afternoon. That dropped the regulation for two weeks in succession, and the purchasing public who had become accustomed to getting their groceries and meats Wednesday mornings, forgot that the clerks ever had a half holiday, did not purchase the next week in the forenoon, and now the institution has been abolished.

The half holiday in theory and principle was right. And as long as the public confirmed to the necessary arrangements so long the holiday was successful, but when the public forgot, as the public is very prone to do, and they complained because the stores were closed Wednesday afternoons, as they have been in that city ever since last June, then the merchants became panicky and opened their stores.

A number of lessons are concealed in this failure of a really important trade arrangement. In the first place, the merchants themselves did not stand together. A few of the larger stores along the main street opened their doors, giving various reasons for doing it, and perforce the others felt compelled to do the same, else they were fearful of losing more or less custom.

In a matter of this kind a dealer may find much good advertising if he chooses to develop his oportunities. For example, in this particular city it would have been possible for any dealer to have advertised that he believed in justice to the workers, and that he was to close his store on Wednesday afternoons to afford them a chance to have a little time to themselves, and he could have impressed it upon his customers that they must buy before or after. Nearly all people believe in justice, and where workingmen are concerned, it is the developing spirit of the age to favor them, if possible, but to insure it something besides mere suggestions are essential.

Dealers everywhere to whom this same matter may be presented in the future will do well to consider the questions here presented, determining their action by their own environment. The same conditions will not govern in any two places alike. Local circumstances will always be the determining factor in a movement of this character. And local circumstances should be permitted to control. It cannot well be otherwise, and the man who would attempt to base his action elsewhere upon the same set of facts that were resented to the dealers in this city would make a mistake. He must work out his own salvation, remembering always that justice is, after all, the controlling influence in human affairs and that even though men may seem to pervert it, and for a time it seems to be afar off, yet, eventually justice will prevail and the man who has attempted to be just will finally be the man who will succeed.

On the side of the employes there is much to be said. They undoubtedly would like a half holiday, but the question that might arise would be, do they appreciate it when they get it? Do they realize that it is a concession on the employer's part, sometimes when he really believes he is losing business by conceding that much? Do they undertake to compensate him for this advantage by doing all they can to make his business successful? Much depends upon the employe, and the employer has a right to expect and insist upon faithful and efficient service. That is his due for the money he is paying, and the employe who does not do as well as he can is really taking money which does not belong to him.

It is conceivable that both employers and employes may not wholly understand or fully appreciate all the ramifications of a question which is as complicated as this. Yet the basis of it all, as has been said, lies plain, old-fashioned justice. If the employer does not grant such requests it will have to be admitted that it is his own business he is conducting, and it should be assumed in fairness to him, that he can conduct it without assistance in the way which seems to him to be most desirable. If it does not suit the employes two courses are left. They can appeal to him to change his policy or leave his employ.

If they are competent employes the employer will listen to what they have to say. If they are not it might be questioned whether their questions would be useful. But the matter must be settled between them. They alone are familiar with all the points which enter into the controversy or discussion.

The modern world is assuming a changed attitude, theoretically, at least, with reference to these matters. While the public soon forgets and there is always more or less question about what shall be done in a case of this kind, gradually the business man and his employes are coming together as they were a century ago, when they lived together and knew each other, and frequently worked side by side at the same bench. Under the present system that, of course, is impossible, but there is a familiarty with conditions which might be easily acquired and would result in the settlement of a great many disputes before they begin.

If the employer knew the employe and understood his problems and what he has to overcome he would feel different about him. We may pass a stranger without considering his necessities, but the moment we become friendly, then we find our sympathies aroused when one is in trouble or we are rejoicing when he is glad. It is a part of human nature, and the real or assumed differences of employers from employes is at the root of much of the present troubles which confront business men and capitalists. A genuine understanding of conditions which surround both would be eminently desirable for each.

The same principles apply to the small employer as to the large one. Neither can escape the consequences of unwise action, no matter by whom it is originated. It is conceivable that the entire grocery service in the city under consideration will suffer because of this deprivation of the half holiday after it had been granted. The sense of injury is strong in the minds of some and even though they may conscienciously strive to make their work as good as it was before there is grave danger that they will not succeed, and that for a paltry few hours the entire service will suffer more than can be made up in weeks or even months.

All these questions enter into the problem, and it is difficult to eliminate them. It is not for one to say that they should not. They do and they will. And the problems which are presented must be solved. Otherwise the entire business fabric suffers. So great a matter a little fire kindleth.

CANNED FOOD HERE TO STAY.

From the Detroit News:—The demand for canned food is a natural one. Canning has left the home and gone into public life quite for the same reason that bootmaking and weaving and other fine old home activities have become public utilities. Canning as a non-domestic industry is another manifestation of the new economy that is making of women breadwinners instead of breadmakers.

It is still not uncommon to hear a housewife say with pride: "I put up all our vegetables and fruits. I never buy a can of anything."

Here is a fine yet mistaken enthusiasm. Even though she counts her time and labor worth nothing, a woman cannot can and preserve her vegetables and fruit, using the best of materials, and compete in price with the best of the great canneries. Moreover, you will observe that she admits the necessity yet she fails to see that it was division of labor that begot them and that she is failing to accept her division. She is only setting her back against the current of the times, which tends to lift from her the burden of domestic hand labor and give her an opportunity for specialization, regardless of sex, that the new century demands.

WOMEN'S NATIONAL CIVIC FEDERATION.

It is announced that a nation-wide crusade and campaign by the Women's National Civic Federation has been taken up for the enforcement of the Drug and Food Laws. Dr. Carl Alsberg, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, Department of Agriculture, was the principal speaker at the annual convention of the Federation, and he emphasized the imperative need of strengthening and extending the scope of the Pure Food and Drugs Act, urging the women to cooperate with the government officials in their nation-wide campaign and in the Department's efforts to secure additional legislation, supplementing a number of the present laws, which are defective. The doctor pointed out vividly the necessity of federal legislation for factory outputs of food and drinks. The national label and fraudulent advertising law, advised by the National Advertising Association was also commended.

OYSTER CULTURE.

For a good many years it has not been necessary, remarks the New York Press, to resort to any other argument other than facts and figures to prove the case for oyster culture. One State after another from Rhode Island to the Gulf, has demonstrated what can be done. Discussion of the merits of the general question is as idle as debate on whether the earth is round or flat.

Virginia's success, of which we get data from a recent report of that State's Commission of Fisheries, has long been a shining example to Maryland because it has been achieved next door to the latter State. The annual production of oysters in the waters of Virginia has increased from a "neglible quantity" to a present total of 15,000,000 bushels. This, it happens, was the production of Maryland in 1885; but the crop now is only 5,500,000 bushels. Anybody can see at a glance what Virginia has gained and Maryland has lost.

Has this increase left the natural bar oysterman stranded, as one might infer from some of the pleas made by candidates in Maryland tide-water counties in political campaigns? Not at all. The Virginia report states that production on the natural bars has increased even more than on the leased areas. Anything that helps the industry in which the oystermen are engaged helps them. And it helps them directly as well as indirectly.

There has been a good chance to see the steady climb of Virginia and the decreasing outlook in Maryland for many years. The difference is simply that the Virginians have gone about the work in a business-like way, with the object of developing the industry, instead of trifling with prejudice and toying with petty politics. Meanwhile a once great industry of Maryland is languishing.

The lesson of conservation and stimulation of resources is as obvious for other states.

BACTERIA IN ICE CREAM.

"There are many ice cream establishments in which all the needs of cleanliness are cheerfully afforded," says Professor S. C. Keith, in Science, "the produce being made and marketed in a sanitary way. On the other hand, there are in the business many less responsible men who should by rights be watched every moment. Unfortunately, the fundamental law does not consider any but present conditions. The past of an irresponsible does not count against him, and if he can show an establishment that is passable at the moment it is very difficult to withhold his license, although there may be the certainty of lapses from hygienic conditions the next moment. This legal condition, which is by no means limited to the manufacture of food products, explains why it is always possible for an individual observer to focus his attention upon one particular spot and find what he is likely to herald as gross negligence on the part of the authorities. The watching by the authorities of all the numerous interests as closely as a critical individual can watch one would demand an appropriation so tremendous that no council or legislature could think of it for a moment."

Professor Keith, who is connected with the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, follows the pattern of scientific men in general with a three-line technical title which means, "Does Freezing Kill Germs?" He first states the general understanding, which is that, while temperatures about the freezing point are considered less destructive than those about the boiling point, still freezing is bad for bacteria and will kill them. There are a number of authorities who have taken up the matter with reference to water, who state that temperature has a direct relation to bacterial life, and the number of parasitical bacteria at least may be quickly lessened by the action of cold.

It has been gradually become evident, however, that certain frozen foods, such as ice cream, frozen meat and frozen milk, often contain very large numbers of living bacteria, even when kept for a long time. This seems like a contradiction of the opinion first noted, and to this contradiction Professor Keith's attention was directed during his studies of frozen eggs, which even after an exposure of many months to the temperature of zero F., still contained many bacteria. It seemed from such observations that neither such a degree of cold nor such a length of time is of itself necessarily destructive to bacterial life. It has been to get data on this whole matter that the present investigations were undertaken.

The investigations have been mostly with bacillus coli, which thrives at moderate temperatures, especially at blood heat. Test materials were kept in cold storage warehouse at temperatures down to zero for times as long as from four to eight months. The general results of the preliminary study may thus be set forth: When the bacteria are frozen in Boston tap water into solid ice and kept at about zero, only a fraction of one per cent. remain alive after five days, while storage of a few weeks results in the complete destruction of the bacteria.

The next line of investigation undertaken by Professor Keith was with bacillus coli frozen not solidly as before, but as in a water ice or ice cream, and kept in this condition at about zero. Here it was found that a large percentage of the bacilli remain alive after months. When bacillus coli is frozen in pure milk, and that more or less diluted, the largest numbers surviving are in the undiluted milk and the fewest in the milk that is most watered. With various percentages of glycerine in the water, the bacteria remain alive for months. Temperature experiments with glycerine and water show that at 100 degrees F. the bacteria die rapidly. As the temperature is lowered this rate diminishes till frezing is reached, and between this and zero there is little if any change in the death rate.

From these experiments, in which a number of other bacteria have been used, although the experiments have centred about bacillus coli, it would appear that low temperatures (down to zero) do not by themselves destroy bacteria. On the contrary, they appear to favor bacteria longevity. Frozen food materials, such as ice cream, milk and egg substances, do not favor the preservation of bacteria, not because they are foods, apparently, but because the conditions they furnish seem somehow to be protective to the bacteria. What these conditions are may be suggested briefly. Possibly it is a mechanical process that kills the bacteria in solid ice. In the looser freezings, like ice cream or water ice, it seems probable that the bacteria lie between the crystals of frozen material. whereas, in water, when frozen, there are not these places of refuge. This idea is supported by the fact that in snow ice or bubbly ice there are bacteria, although in cake ice they are absent.

The experiments indicate, and the fact is noted by Professor Keith, that there seems to be a condition of suspended vitality—may not this be the "latent life" of the European observers?—in which plants and animals sustain the rigorous cold, even of Arctic winters, and come to life again in the spring without apparent injury.

The practical application of the investigation at the moment is, to be careful of the source and handling of cold foods or desserts or refreshments as careful of them as we are of milk and water supplies.

FACTS AND RESOURCES.

"Off the southern coast countries there is an inexhaustible supply of food fish—the best in the world," Dr. Carl Alsberg, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, says apropos of the high cost of meat, "and let me tell you this Department has an interest in fish food other than as an article of inter-state commerce and other than as a mere edible. Every pound of food taken from the sea relieves the land of producing a corresponding amount of meat. This releases so many more acres for the production of fruit and grain. Every pound of food produced on land uses some of our soil fertility. Sea food is a net gain to the land."

In the mountain streams there is an abundance of different varieties of trout, all protected in certain seasons of the year.

Among the many species of food fish which swarm along our coast in inexhaustible numbers are halibut, mackerel, herring, sole, yellowtail, cod, skate, barracuda and sea bass. To these must be added swordfish, which is said by Dr. Alsberg to be excellent eating. But there is no means of knowing the quantity of these useful substitutes for animal meat.

But shellfish which abound in large numbers along the cost must not be omitted from the list. There is the oyster which is cultivated steadily, the clam, the abalone (much relished by the Chinese), the lobster, crab, shrimp, etc.

When the immense varieties of food consumed by the human biped is catalogued—cereal, root, fruit, nut and animal (including birds, beasts and fishes) it is perceived that man is a very omnivirous creature, and it is not surprising that he finds something to his needs under all sorts of conditions and in all kinds of environments.

CROP YIELDS IN OTHER COUNTRIES.

Russia's wheat yield for twenty years has averaged only 8¼ bushels per acre, with the ground lying fallow every third year and a famine every five years.

The average farm lands of New England, New York, Virginia and other eastern States have markedly decreased in productive power and value. Thousands of acres within 100 miles of Washington, D. C., once worth $50 to $75 an acre, are now abandoned for agriculture. The east frequently spends $2 to $20 per acre for plant food to keep up its soils.

Wheat in England averages 32 bushels per acre, but England imports four times as much wheat as she produces. English farmers use several hundred thousand tons of commercial plant food annually.

Belgium imports five times as much wheat as she produces and quantities of corn and oil cake.

Germany consumes nearly twice as much wheat as she produces and imports corn and 1,000,000,000 pounds of oil cake. While she exports principally 2,000,000,000 pounds of sugar, containing no plant food value.

Denmark imports more wheat than she produces, besides corn and 800,000,000 pounds of oil cake, and exports principally 175,000,000 pounds of butter, containing practically no plant food.

European countries which feed practically all they raise and buy in addition large quantities of fertilizers and other feed stuffs from which to produce still larger amounts of manure, can thus make their soils richer than ever before, but the great agricultural areas of the United States are being steadily depleted.

Improvement in seed cultivation and crop rotation and the addition of 2,000,000 acres of the richest black soil have increased the average yield of corn in Illinois, but some portions of the 7,000,000 acres of older corn land are now producing smaller crops.

If we repeat in the great corn belt the history of land ruin in Palestine, in southern Europe, in Russia and in the eastern United States, where shall our children go for bread? After the land is impoverished it is too late to invest in soil improvement.

If we are to maintain the fertility of our lands we must apply limestone and phosphate where needed to grow legumes, and we must plow under the legumes to feed the grain crops. This is the Illinois system for not only maintaining fertility, but for increasing it indefinitely.—H. A. McKeene, Secretary Illinois Farmers' Institute.

FOWL CHOLERA.

This is one of the most dreaded diseases in the poultry world. It is caused by a germ and is highly contagious. Once it has established itself in a poultry yard, nothing but the most thorough treatment will prevent the annihilation of the entire flock, says the Country Gentleman.

Medical treatment is of little or no avail. The best thing to do is to kill all the sick birds at once, and to kill them in such a way as not to spread the infection with their blood, and to burn their bodies.

The remaining fowls should then be divided into small lots of from three to five each, so that when a bird is attacked by the disease the entire flock will not be exposed to it. Watch each one of the small lots closely and remove every sick bird.

Clean and disinfect everything thoroughly, including small pens containing non-infected fowls, with a carbolic solution made by mixing one pint of crude carbolic acid and ten quarts of water.

All birds not killed should be given three teaspoonsful of a half per cent. carbolic acid solution twice daily. Buttermilk in place of water for drinking is also beneficial. The carbolic acid treatment should be continued from three to five days. The buildings and runs should be thoroughly disinfected and cleaned before the fowls are returned to them and should be kept very clean for some weeks afterward to prevent a re-occurrence of the disease.

PURE FOOD LAW DECISION.

The ruling of the Supreme Court in the "bleached flour" case, and inferentially applicable to a wide range of action under the Pure Food Act, that "adulteration," to be of sufficient degree to be deleterious or to serve as a disguise for other deficiencies in the commodity indicate a loophole in the law, which should be closed if possible, remarks the Evening Bulletin (Philadelphia). Protection of the food supply can hardly be too stringent. It is better to err on the side of safety and enforce the ban against some preparation or process that may be harmless to the average person than to take an unnecessary chance. The obvious effect of this interpretation of the existing law is to make the work of the Federal pure food authorities more difficult, and to increase the opportunities of food manufacturers to evade the law. The question is not simply whether in this particular commodity in question there is a menace to human health, but whether the rule of standards which the court establishes, under the law as it stands, preparations which are potentially injurious can be placed on the market and the protecting power of the Federal food authorities can be practically defied.

CHANGES FOR THE BETTER IN THE MILK BUSINESS.

A material change for the better has been made in the milk situation in most sections of the State as to business methods, preparation of the product at the dairies and the notable decrease in the number of smaller milkmen operating in the cities. With the small milk dealers the year proved rather uneventful as to increased business, while with those institutions that were able to make the necessary improvements in equipment and the sanitary condition of their plants, the increased amount of business transacted during the past twelve months, proved to be quite an item in the history of the business.

From day to day younger people are being brought into the business, and with this installation of new blood comes the new, and in many cases, more progressive ideas of business, so that the many houses which have failed to meet this emergency, or having failed to see the necessity of combatting with the advances of time, have passed down to a much lower prominence and in many cases out of the business altogether.

These conditions may be said to have been the result of this advanced legislation, and in fact it is generally admitted by the trade that this is the case. The dealers, instead of sitting back and howling, have gone on ahead and complied with the requirements and the public has taken notice. They wanted improvements and in accordance their business has gone, in a majority of instances, to such dairies as are considered to be best equipped in the eyes of the law.

BACTERIA FROM MILKER.

In a recent bulletin issued by the Stoors Agricultural Experimental Station of Connecticut, the authors discuss the milker as a source of bacteria in milk, and base their discussion on practical observations and experiments conducted at the Station.

The kind of bacteria, they say that the milker is likely to introduce into the milk include nearly the whole list found in milk. It seldom occurs to the average milker that it is necessary to wash the hands before milking as before eating a meal of victuals. The numbers of bacteria that come from soiled clothes and dirty hands which get into the milk are large. The hands of a milker working around the farm during the time he is not engaged in milking were tested just before milking for the number of bacteria that could be washed off in a quart of sterile water. The number was found to be 45,000,000. This washing did not remove all those that would have dropped off during the milking. Another experiment was made to determine how many bacteria were left on the hands after thorough washing with soap and warm water. The number that could be washed off them in sterile water was found to be 900,000. These two experiments show that 98 per cent. can be washed from the hands.

The clothing of the ordinary dairyman carries immense numbers of organisms with dust from all sorts of contamination. The milker has a much wider range for the collection of a larger number and greater variety of organisms than the cow. The only proper attire for the milker is a white suit and cap to be worn only at milking time. A white suit shows dirt very readily, will last a long time and can be sterilized almost instantly.

The milker may not only be the source of a very large number of harmless bacteria, but the greatest source of disease germs that get into the milk. The milker may be the immediate source of disease germs or may transmit them to another person. The disease germs that get into milk are largely of human origin, infectious diseases that pass from individual to individual. A grave mistake has been made in the past by allowing persons ill with contagious disease to enter the cow stable or dairy where milk is handled. Many an epidemic of a fatal character has been traced to a case of illness on a dairy farm which was not properly quarantined and cared for. One high grade milk handling concern requires that if a case of contagious disease arises in the dairy of one of its patrons, that the milk supply be withheld until the patient has passed the danger limit of conveying the disease germs. The milk produced, however, is paid for during the quarantine. It is very difficult to make the individual understand or even believe that our worst diseases are caused by special kinds of bacteria, and that these bacteria can be transmitted to a healthy person who is likely to contract the same disease.

ABOUT EGGS.

The high price of hen fruit has aroused the nation's attention, remarks The Retailers' Journal. The housewives' leagues are boycotting the old hen's famous product to cut down the price. To understand the situation one must study the habits of the old hen.

In February the hens of the country begin their annual output of eggs for gin fizzes and other uses. By April the hen has her egg factory working on full time and eggs are cheap and plenty. At this time the surplus cheap eggs are placed in cold storage. As summer advances the old hen's egg factory begins to work on short time until finally, about October 1st, the factory is closed down for the winter months.

The old hen has reason for this. Like every female the old hen insists on having a new dress once a year. Unlike mankind the old rooster has not been educated to furnish the old hen a new dress, so she has to do it herself. From October 1st to January 1st the old hen uses all the angle worms, bugs and vegetables from her neighbor's garden, which went into eggs in the springtime, to make her a new dress for the Easter holidays. As a result the price of eggs goes out of sight.

Enter. The villain of the play, the cold storage man.

Now cold storage has its uses and abuses. As an agent in transferring our surplus food products from time of plenty to times of scarcity, the cold storage man is a benefactor to the human race. But when the time of scarcity arrives and he refuses to put his products on the market at a reasonable profit, but holds them off and by reason of his monopoly, extorts exorbitant prices from the consumer, cold storage becomes an abuse.

PROGRESS OF FOOD LEGISLATION.

M. E. Pennington of the United States Department of Agriculture in an address at the Food Question Banquet of the Philadelphia Produce Exchange said among other things:—

"No other civilized country wastes foodstuffs as we waste them. If all crops that the farmers raise were utilized; all the meat animals that are killed eaten; all the fish that come into the nets marketed, hundreds of thousand who are now hungry would be well fed, and the agitation on the subject of high prices would not attract much attention.

"Conservation of food stuffs, in its broad sense, means not only the saving of the excess production of flush seasons for the seasons of scarcity, but it also means the systematic, scientific care that prevents wormy apples or windfalls, prevents the fermentation of carload after carload of corn, prevents the rancid butter from the dirty farm, or the rotten eggs or the tainted chicken.

"The toil of the farmer results in the production of foods. Faulty handling from the time the apple is ripe, the egg is laid or the fish caught—for in essentials our fishermen are comparable with our farmers—reduces enormously the amount which finally reaches the consuming center, and lowers to even a greater extent the quality of a large proportion of that which is saved from the crematory or the dump.

"Go to any of the market terminals in this city on a summer Wednesday or Saturday, between 12 and 4 A. M., and see for yourselves the wastage of vegetables because of decay, low quality or market gluts. Look at the spoiled poultry during a warm autumn—thousands of pounds of it. What are we doing as broad-minded intelligent citizens to acquaint ourselves with such facts and to assist, intelligently, those who are more directly charged with such responsibility?

"For centuries we have conserved meat by smoking or salting, fish by smoking and drying, winter vegetables by earth cellars. Our great canning industry has so improved and developed the elemental principles of the housewife's 'preserving' that it has literally resulted in altering the face of the earth. Man now lives healthfully, where he could not live heretofore. Canning foodstuffs has also served to equalize the seasonal supply, and is truly conservational. Latest in its development and broadest in its benefits and conserving power, has come refrigeration—again a great industrial development from the housewife's springhouse, or cellar or ice house.

To refrigeration, more than to any other single factor, must we look for the elimination of decay, the preservation of quality and the conservation of perishable products. Like 'smoking' which means the preservation of the meat by the combustion products of wood; or 'canning,' which means that bacterial life is killed by heat, refrigeration must be specially and accurately applied if its maximum benefits are to be obtained. It must be combined with 'good handling.' as the broad phrase goes; that is, the perishable article must be put under refrigeration while it is sound and fresh, just as it should be canned while it is sound and fresh. National and State and municipal agencies are now endeavoring to inculcate improved methods of handling foodstuffs at the source of production, and frequently refrigeration is an absolutely necessary part of such methods. The railroads are adding refrigerator cars by the thousand each year to haul these perishables safely. Refrigerated terminals are being built to receive them, refrigerated warehouses in which to hold them until they are needed.

"Only one thing intervenes to prevent refrigeration as a conserver of both quality and quantity of food products from being the greatest price-equalizing agency that we at present possess, and that is the ignorance of the consumer of the source and time of the production, transportation and storage of our food supplies. The cupidity of the dishonest tradesman is fed by this ignorance. If the consumer does not wish to eat refrigerated products he should not be compelled to do so. But he will find that his winter bill of fare will show an overwhelming preponderance of salt pork, carrots, turnips and potatoes. If he is to continue to have the cream of the seasons all the year around he must accept them preserved by sterilization or refrigeration—more especially the latter. And to obtain to the full the benefits due him, he must have a more intimate and more exact knowledge of whence and how came the food to the markets. He must lend the aid of his knowledge toward the solving of the food question, part of which is the saving of waste and the equalization of supplies."

A NEW MOVEMENT ON FOOT.

A new movement has been set on foot in several States which will make it compulsory to serve ice cream soda in individual paper cups. This feature has been recommended by a number of health officers in various parts of the country. It is recommended that paper cups, the size and style of the average 12- or 14-ounce soda glass be selected for drug confectionery and all other stores and places where soft drinks are served. It is claimed that no matter how well the ordinary soda glass may be washed, it is far less sanitary than the sanitary paper receptacle. It is further claimed, taking glass breakage into consideration, that the individual paper cup is much more economical than glass. The same principle holds good in the service of ice cream, sundaes and other refreshments served in public places.

THE QUALITY OF MILK.

Do men who keep cows and produce milk for the creamery, the family or the condensery know all they need to know about the necessary care of that milk? In the opinion of a vast number of milk producers they know now all they need to know. This is seen in their unwillingness to lay hold of the means offered them to know more. If that is correct then they are not doing as well as they know how and that is a worse sin than ignorance. Their milk and cream are their constant accusers. The creameries tell it. The city consumers and authorities proclaim it; and the courts are constantly enforcing that judgment.

A food official of a certain State instituted quite a close investigation, taking a large number of tests of the average milk produced by the farmers of the State by which he was employed. What he was after was to know the percentage of milk that was free from just plain, common dirt. His report states that of the milk sold in the larger towns only 4 per cent. was a first class product. That shows there was 96 per cent. of either ignorance, or willful carelessness in every hundred pounds of market milk produced in that State.

Only 35 per cent. was what might be called just fair, while 61 per cent. was bad. That is a pretty dark record for the average milk producer of that State.

To what shall it be ascribed? Is it blank ignorance of what every dairyman ought to know, or is it just indifference and unwillingness to take that care of this food product such as every consumer has a right to demand. There seems to be a close relation between good milk and the strict enforcement of wise laws on that subject.

The above remarks do not apply to conditions in the milk supply of Pennsylvania, generally.

EFFECT OF CERTAIN DAIRY OPERATIONS UPON THE GERM CONTENT OF MILK.

The following is taken from a bulletin issued by the New York Agricultural Association:—

1. There is a great opportunity for economy in sanitary milk production through the saving of useless labor. In order to be a guide in this matter dairy studies must be on the basis of single dairy processes.

2. The protection of milk pails from accidental contamination after they had been thoroughly steamed had a measurable effect in reducing the germ content of the milk.

3. The cleanliness of the interior of the stable, within a fairly wide range, had no measurable effect upon the milk.

4. Clipping the udder, flank and adjoining portions of the cow slightly increased the germ content of the milk when the cow was cleaned either by hand or with a vacuum cleaning machine.

5. When cows were cleaned with a brush and comb at the rate of two cows per minute the germ content of the milk was practically the same as when the cows were treated with a vacuum cleaner at the rate of one cow per minute.

6. When all the utensils had been carefully steamed, cooling and straining the milk resulted in only a small increase in the germ content even when this was done under what would ordinarily be considered as rather unfavorable conditions.

Those who have followed recent discussions of germ content of city milk and particularly those who are familiar with the extreme precautions which are taken by many producers of certified milk will be struck by the small germ content which has characterized the milk obtained during these experiments.

In obtaining milk which shall be below the 10,000 limit, it is the custom to expend much labor in washing the cows and in keeping the interior of the barn scrupulously clean.

Those who have carefully noted the germ content obtained from milk samples as given in this publication, will be surprised at the large number of counts which are under 1,000 germs per c.c. From the results of an extended study of the udder content of this same group of cows, it was concluded that the udder content was responsible for an average count of about 500 c.c. When allowance is made for this udder factor it will be seen that there is only a small germ count in the milk remaining to be accounted for as contamination from the outside of the cow and the barn air.

Since these counts were practically all made of the milk at the close of the milking process and the germ count with which the public are familiar are those of the milk as ready for market, it may be assumed that the after handling would bring the germ content of this milk up to much higher figures. The results from 85 samples taken at various stages in its later handling do not support this idea.

There seems to be no escape from the conclusion that the germ content of these samples was low, simply because the samples did not contain many germs which were capable of growing in the media ordinarily employed in such studies even when unusual care was taken in stimulating their growth.

The milk was produced under general conditions which appear to be no better than those surrounding a considerable number of ordinary city dairies, conditions which would probably not be acceptable to any certified milk commission. Notwithstanding these facts the extended study of the product indicates that in bacterial count at least it is of the very highest quality. That milk of this quality is not uniformly produced is illustrated by the fact that a commercial dairy in which the methods and equipment resemble those at the Experiment Station, except that steam is not available for treating the utensils, quite uniformly turns out a product with a content approximating 1,000,000 germs per c.c.

Under such circumstances it is pertinent to inquire as to the points of difference between these two dairies. At the Experiment Station the stable is kept cleaner, the cows are much cleaner, the milkers are cleaner and the utensils are thoroughly steamed. Apparently the wide difference in the germ content of the product from these two dairies lies in the influence of one or more of these factors.

The important fact which is being gradually recognized through these and similar observations is that the production of a reasonably clean and low germ content milk will be a far simpler and less expensive undertaking when the factors which really govern its production are actually understood.

RECENT RECORD COWS.

Pear, a Red Polled cow, owned in Duluth, Minn., holds two world's records. During the last year she yielded 13,001 pounds of milk and 605 pounds of butterfat, the latter being equivalent to about 726 pounds of commercial butter. Her aggregate yield for four years also constitutes a world's record for Red Polled cows for that length of time.

La May, a red Holstein cow, owned by the Nebraska college of agriculture, in the last year produced 26,660 pounds of milk and 773.49 pounds of butterfat, the equivalent of 966.8 pounds of butter. This record places her ninth in milk production among the cows of the world. She also has the distinction of having yielded more milk in a year than any other cow owned by a State Agricultural College.

College Bravura II, nine years old, a Brown Swiss cow, owned by the Michigan Agricultural College, last year yielded 19,304.6 pounds of milk which tested 4.102 per cent. butterfat and made 1,000.5 pounds of butter. This establishes a new record for her breed.

Maud H. II's Lass, a registered Holstein cow, at the Delaware College Experiment Station, in the last nine months yielded 16,139 pounds of milk and 663 pounds of butter.

A grade Holstein cow belonging to H. E. Tong, member of the Stanislaus (Cal.) Cow Testing Association, in thirty days produced 1,485 pounds of milk and 84.6 pounds of butterfat, her percentage being 5.7.

Queen Colanthe Fayne, a pure bred Holstein cow, four years old, at the experiment station of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, Deer Lodge, Mont., yielded milk which in seven days tested 596 pounds—295 quarts—equivalent to 23.6 pounds of butter.

Lass Jewel 113211, a Jersey cow nineteen years and a half old, has a record of 7,590 pounds and four ounces of milk, 412 pounds and 13.7 ounces of butterfat in the last year's test, which equals 485 pounds and 11 ounces of 85 per cent. butter. She is the oldest cow in the J. C. C. Register of Merit and has seven daughters in the Register.

FOOD FOR STOCK AND HUMAN.

The Milk Reporter:—Rev. Robert A. George, of Cleveland, Ohio, preached a sermon on the care the dairyman gives his cows and how scientifically they have been taught to feed stock, while the human is fed according to the advertisements in the papers and on what the grocer tells you is fine, with the result that all sorts of things are fed to children without regard to its being a balanced ration. Denatured flour will produce a denatured race. Back to the farm, back to the simple life, where the air is pure, where the rays of the sun are not obscured by the dust and smoke, where there is fragrance in the fields, in the meadow and in the woods. Back to the farm is the slogan.

EFFECT OF OATS ON THE FLAVOR OF MILK.

It has been asserted by some dairymen that the feeding of crushed oats to cows will improve the flavor of milk. To ascertain the correctness of this theory a series of experiments was made by the Bureau of Animal Industry of the United States Department of Agriculture at the experimental dairy farm at Beltsville, Md. Six cows were used in the experiment; three were fed a grain ration of corn meal, bran and cotton-seed meal; the other three were fed a grain mixture of five parts crushed oats and one part cotton-seed meal. A number of these rations were submitted to various persons in the dairy division and they were asked to indicate their preference. In all fifty opinions were passed on various samples. Of these sixteen showed a preference for the milk from cows fed on crushed oats, twenty-five preferred that from the bran and corn ration, while nine expressed no choice. The result shows that in these rations, not only was there no marked difference in favor of crushed oats as a feed to improve flavor, but, if anything, the ration containing bran and corn was more successful in producing a fine flavored milk.

SEEK OUT THE REAL SOURCES OF INFECTION.

From the Creamery and Milk Plant Monthly.

The pendulum is beginning to swing backward. Less importance is being attached by scientists to the mere number of bacteria in milk. It is being discovered with increasing certainty that those bacteria which get into milk from the animal environment are of little consequence in deciding the hygienic quality of milk except as they serve as a preliminary index of the degree of freshness. On the other hand it becomes increasingly evident that the danger of infectious disease lies in the handling of milk by human workers. Even tuberculosis is, according to certain authorities, no longer the bugbear that it was a short time ago. The present tendency is in favor of properly correlating the danger of infection from a bovine source with that from human sources. A celebrated authority at a recent meeting of the Congress of Hygiene and Demography insisted that bovine tuberculosis did not find any expression in the ethnographic—statistical pictures of the epidemiology of tuberculosis as a national scourge, but was completely overshadowed by the human contagion. If one examines the reports of outbreaks of infectious disease which only in recent years have been studied with sufficient care when traced to milk supplies, it will be found almost invariably that the infection came from humans engaged in one stage or another in the handling of the milk. Moreover, the tests made by the New York Agricultural Station again demonstrate the comparatively inferior part played by the barn environment in the bacterial content of milk. It is also interesting to note in that connection that about one half of the bacterial content of these experiments came from the udder, while the fore-milk contained the greatest number, the strippings showed more than the bulk of the milk and represented the average content. In view of these facts is it out of the way to suggest that research, in order to bring those results which seem to be most urgently needed at the present moment, occupy itself with seeking to discover at what points and in what manner the disease germs are transferred from the human worker into the milk?

If these points of danger are found and proper precautions are adopted to prevent such infection, it seems, a great deal more can be accomplished than by seeking means to depress the number of bacteria, most of which do not harm the user of milk. Perhaps greater stress upon the health of the workers and their habits with regard to cleanliness would be far more important than many of the considerations to which so much attention is given at the present time.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

France has 1,000 co-operative dairies, Germany 4,000, Switzerland 2,000, and Finland 500. Ireland has 500 co-operative dairies but there are very few in England and Scotland.

Electricity is now extensively employed in German farming, especially for driving threshing machinery, hoes, cultivators, plows and small machines, such as grist mills and milk centrifugal machines.

France consumes annually $5,000,000 worth of goats' milk and $250,000,000 worth of cows' milk.

France has a total of 40,000 agricultural co-operative societies.

In the Balkans, before the war, Servia had 1,200 co-operative societies, Bulgaria 1,000, and Roumania 3,500.

In concluding an article on coffee drinking The Lancet (London) says:—"The infusion of coffee presents practically very little material that is of direct nourishing value, but by diminishing nervous fatigue, by virtue chiefly of the caffein present, it may increase muscular power. It is not itself a builder of tissue. The use of coffee after dinner, it is interesting to note, is justified in a large number of cases by the fact of its stimulating effect upon the vital centres, and it is said to serve to some extent as an antidote for alcohol. It is commonly claimed to remove drowsiness; as a matter of fact, in many subjects, it produces drowsiness, but this is usually followed by marked wakefulness. The practice of drinking coffee after a meal for the sake of the stimulus which is experienced has much to be said in it favor dietecically.

A German traveler reports that the negroes in the Camerun country in Africa make a cheese of which they are very fond from the seeds of a tree known as Treculia africana. They cook the seeds and then shell and crush them to a semi-liquid mass. After flavoring the mass with pepper, and pouring off the liquid, they mould it into cakes of a grayish white color that at first do not taste at all like ordinary cheese. The cakes have to ripen just as ordinary cheese. It is exposed to the air and the color gradually changes from gray to yellow, and finally to brown. During the process the cakes smell like cheese, but later have a distinctly sour odor. When ripe they taste like strong cheese; and in fact they are formed by the same bacterial changes that give flavor to our own cheeses.

If you want the very largest, finest, and cleanest tomatoes, tie up every plant to a stake, pinch off all suckers as fast as they form, and thin the fruits to half a dozen or so to each plant. The stakes should be about four feet high and set firmly in the ground. As soon as the tomato plants are tall enough, begin tying them up, using strips of cloth, rather than twine. Suckers form at each end of the plant. Cut or pinch these off clean, and prune the plant back to a single main stalk, with not more than three main branches. Also pinch off the tops of the plants when they reach the height of three and a half feet. Pinch off most of the blossoms, leaving only the clusters that come on the strongest parts of the branches, and not more than six to ten to each plant. The result will be tomatoes of a size, solidity and flavor such as you never have had before. Kept well above the ground, the fruits will not become covered with dirt, and they will not rot as tomatoes so often do when allowed to ripen on the ground. Furthermore, fully twice as many plants may be grown on a given space when the plants are staked and pruned as is possible when they are permitted to grow as they please, all over the ground.

Tests to utilize Montana flax straw have been made in a big mill near Leeds, England, that seem to have resulted successfully. Many previous attempts to treat American fiber have either cost too much or proved impracticable; but the problem seems to have been solved. The flax straw can be taken direct from the field, treated rapidly, dried by the sun, passed through special machinery and put upon the market at a minimum of cost and time. The fiber retains the full original strength. The manufacturers are convinced, after many experiments, that their treatment can be applied to flax straw grown in any part of the United States and that the resultant fiber can be made into all varieties of yarn and twine, including binder, packing and stop twines. With the vast acreage now in flax in the United States American farmers should welcome a process that makes possible the utilization of straw heretofore burned.

"As a fishing centre Iceland is supreme," says Carl Laentzen, the Arctic explorer who recently returned from the "isolated island." "It has one of the largest fishing banks in the world and the fleets of England, France and Holland go up there every year."

That the Lake Michigan region may, within five years, become the greatest salmon packing centre of the world, surpassing in importance even the famous Columbia River and Alaskan districts, is the astounding but confident prediction of Superintendent Dwight Hydell of the Michigan State bass hatchery at Comstock Park.

A race of fresh water oysters is possibly developing in Algeria. At a late meeting of the French biologists mention was made of the planting of oyster beds in the mouth of the Macta River where the sand banks have cut them off from the Mediterranean and confined them in fresh water. The expected disaster did not follow this change. The old oysters failed to stand the new conditions but the young have disproven the view that they could live only in salt water and have developed and propagated very rapidly.

One eel will lay from 10,000,000 to 20,000,000 eggs, according to United States Fish Commissioner Hugh M. Smith. Eels always spawn in deep water, and the parent eels die after spawning only once.

The highest prices in the history of the trade were paid to fishermen during the past herring season in Scotland, the total catch for which has been about 1,400,000 crans (about 1,000 fish to the cran). In an ordinary season 20 shillings per cran is reckoned a good price, but on account of a keen demand for cured fish in the Continental and American markets the price rose sometimes to 50 shillings a cran, and the average would be about 35 shillings, making over $12,000,000 paid to the fishermen during the season.

In buying beef, mutton, poultry or fish by the pound there is always a good deal of waste in the form of bones, inedible portions, feathers, etc. In a cut of steak, for instance, the waste often runs as high as 30 and 60 per cent. In poultry it is often greater. In the oyster there are no bones, feathers and no inedible portions; it is all meat and particularly rich in those elements which go to repair over-worked brains and nervous systems. Oysters are readily prepared in a chafing dish, more so than other foods. If the average housewife only knew of the many delicious dishes she could make in a chafing dish, the consumption of oysters would increase by leaps and bounds.

The latest diet craze is to have your food as highly colored as possible, and from Germany comes the pale blue lobster, the invention of a learned professor named Kornfeld, says Pearson's Weekly. Red lobsters being too commonplace to whet the jaded appetites of society diners, the professor hit upon the brilliant idea of adding an alkali to the water in which the lobsters are boiled. As a result they come out a pretty pale blue, and the smart set are able to breathe again.

The general sentiment of the nation is against the advertising faker especially in matters pertaining to foods and medicines.

There is no thief as small as the faker who puts out false advertising. He kills the confidence of the people in all manner of advertising; honest merchants detest this species of parasite growth.

India has more cattle and dairy cows than any other country in the world, but many of these cattle do not compare either as to size or production with many of the countries having a fewer number of cattle. While there are no reliable statistics it is safe to say that the total value of all her cattle and dairy products is less than that of the United States and several other countries. The grand total number of cattle for the world is, according to available statistics, 454,210,000, and of this number India is said to have 113,931,000. The United States has 58,796,000.

Lime is extensively used as a fertilizer in all sections of the country. Any farmer where limestone and wood is plentiful can make his own lime if he has the time and inclination. All he has to do is to build a pyramid of wood and limestone alternately, and then set the wood afire. When the fire burns out he has a supply of excellent lime, ready to apply to his fields. A lime kiln like this is an echo of the time when people were dependent entirely upon their own resources for the necessaries and luxuries of life.

Millers and food manufacturers generally throughout the country won a decisive victory over the government recently when the Supreme Court held that Federal inspectors could not condemn, under the Pure Food Law, "bleached flour," unless they proved that the flour collected enough poisonous ingredients in bleaching to make it injurious to health. Officials of the Department of Agriculture have fought the case bitterly contending that the adding of any poisonous ingredients was a violation of the law. They concentrated their efforts to have this applicable to every other proceeding involving an article of food claimed to contain added poisonous or deleterious substances. The principal effect of the decision will be to require much more expert testimony in practically every case the government prosecutes for violation of the Pure Food Laws.

Bulletin No. 47, recently issued by the Department of Agriculture, contains many valuable suggestions regarding potato growing in the United States. The publication offers suggestions for the proper use of surplus potatoes and should prove valuable at this time when Federal quarantines threaten to prohibit imports of potatoes from Canada and Europe because of the danger of introducing potato diseases into this country.

Joseph A. Arnold, chief of the Division of Publications, Department of Agriculture, reports that during the past fiscal year the Government put out 33,356,366 agricultural publications, 9,680,850 of which were farmers' bulletins. For the latter an appropriation of $125,000 was made, and 12,500 copies of each farmers' bulletin went to each senator, representative and delegate, subject to their orders for distribution.

The Swiss condensed milk industry has made rapid progress in recent years, the exports reaching a record figure in 1912. One company controlling seven factories in Switzerland, five in England, three in Norway, three in Australia, two in Bavaria, one in Austria and one in Spain, and its annual output is valued at $10,000,000. England and its colonies are the largest consumers of Swiss condensed milk. By an international agreement none of its product is exported to the United States, but large shipments have been made to the Philippine Islands in recent years, and the trade in that colony is rapidly increasing.

People generally are prone to complain of the high cost of milk, but according to W. B. Barney, Dairy and Food Commissioner of Iowa, there is as much nutrition in a quart of milk costing 8 cents as there is in 15 cents worth of beef, costing 22 cents a pound, or 29 cents worth of eggs, costing 35 cents a dozen. The way to beat the high cost of living question is to study the nutritive value of different foods and obtain the most nutrition for the money. For instance, if you like bread and milk, you can set a bounteous meal for two persons for thirteen cents and get as much nutriment as you would secure from 92 cents worth of eggs. A loaf of bread weighing sixteen ounces can be purchased for five cents. A loaf of bread has as much nourishment as thirty-two eggs, according to Mr. Barney's table. A quart of milk, at 8 cents, equals ten eggs in nutritive value. The combined cost will be thirteen cents and the combined nutritive value will be thirty-two eggs, worth about 92 cents at 35 cents a dozen.

That increased production of milk from cows may result from an experiment of goats at the Cornell Medical College, New York, seems probable, though investigators are unwilling to predict the result. According to R. H. Hill, a graduate of Cornell, a goat has been made to give twice as much milk which is five times richer in cream contents than normal, through the injection of a new serum under the skin or into a large blood vessel of the animal. The serum is said to be a preparation of the pituitary glands at the base of the brain of live stock. The glands which are about the size of two peas are removed and then filtered after being allowed to stand for a time.

The serum contains the essence of the glands and causes the increase in the milk supply. It has been found necessary to inject the serum nearly every day to sustain the increase in the production of milk. Only a short time after the injection this increase starts.

Milk Reporter:—Since modern social standards have precluded the possibilty of the infant getting his milk in the good old-fashioned way has there been any such decrease in infant mortality as some men claimed for it? Can it be said that nothing else honestly enters into this decrease of infant mortality other than milk? It is possible that mothers have learned nothing else aside from milk feeding.

BLEACHING FLOUR UNLAWFUL.

The recent decree of the Supreme Court of the United States in the bleached flour case has no bearing whatever upon the Pennsylvania food law or upon its enforcement. This statement is made here and now to the end that the trade may be fully advised as to the exact fact. A similar statement was issued through the public press about the time the decision of the federal court was handed down. The decree of the court was based upon the following language of the federal law:

"If it contain any added poisonous or other added deleterious ingredient which may render such article injurious to health."

There is a vital difference between the federal act and our State law. The Commonwealth is not under the necessity of proving that the presence of the forbidden ingredients will injure the consumer. An examination of the Pennsylvania act will show that the legislature has specifically prohibited the addition of nitrous acid or nitrites in all articles of food. Of course this includes flour. And under the specific language of the act the Commonwealth is left but one course to pursue, and that is to prosecute all manufacturers or dealers who manufacture or sell flour in Pennsylvania which contains nitrous acid or nitrites.

The Dairy and Food Bureau wishes to state as emphatically as possible that careful investigation will be made in every section of the Commonwealth and prosecution will be promptly ordered in every case wherein the law has been violated.

It is stated that some manufacturers of flour are using chlorine for bleaching purposes. This cannot be lawfully done under the general provisions of the Pennsylvania law which declares "or other added ingredient deleterious to health." This language differs very materially from the federal law and the supreme court of Pennsylvania has decided in the Kevin case, that if the added substance is injurious to health in any quantity it cannot be used so that the question of quantity is immaterial.

It is hoped this statement is sufficiently informing to prevent trouble to manufacturers or dealers. It is made for that purpose.

A SHORT SUPPLY.

Since 1910 there has been a decrease in this country of 7,305,000 food animals; in the population there has been an increase for the same period of nearly 7,000,000. These figures were given out recently at Washington by the Department of Agriculture, which declares their meaning to be that " it will take 18,259,000 more meat animals than the estimates show to give the present population the same meat supply that was known to exist in 1910." Among the causes of this shortage in meat animals the following are named:

The encroachment of farms upon the range territory.

The lack of a proper range keeping law permitting economical management and utilization of ranges.

The shortage in the corn and forage crop due to the severe drought in Kansas, Nebraska and Oklahoma in 1913, which caused the farmers in those states to dispose of their meat animals.

The increase in the value of land and the increased cost of labor and stock feed, resulting in greatly increased cost of production.

The decline in stock raising on farms in the east and south, because of poor marketing facilities, resulting from many local slaughtering establishments having been driven out of business by the competition of the great central slaughtering establishments of the west and central west.

The temptation to sell live stock at the prevailing high prices rather than to continue to carry them with high priced stock feed, possible loss from disease or accident, and uncertain prices the following year.

Enormous losses from hog cholera.

The competition of higher prices for other farm products.

While the number of meat animals is now 7,000,000 less than it was in 1910 the value of the present supply is greater than the value of the supply of 1910; according to the estimates of the department, it is greater by $395,487,000. In this fact we see one reason for the increased cost of the food supply. The farm value of beef cattle since 1910 has increased per head from $19.07 to $31.13, that is, about 63 per cent. Swine increased in the same period 13.4 per cent. Sheep, however slightly declined. Further comments by the department are as follows:

"This increase in the average value of meat animals does not necessarily mean that farmers or stock raisers are making more, if any, profit. On the contrary the cost of production has probably increased in the same period more rapidly than the increased selling price of live stock.

"The largely increased value of meat animals on farms is largely accounted for by the increased cost of production and the increased consumption or demand arising from the fact that production has not kept pace with the increase in population, and in the case of cattle and sheep has actually declined. It is well known that the producers of farm products are the last to receive any benefits from higher prices paid by consumers, yet they are among the first to increase production if there is a prospect of realizing better returns.

The very fact that there is a present shortage of nearly 19,000,000 meat animals in the United States since the census of 1910 indicates clearly that the business is not profitable to producers; otherwise, every farmer and stock raiser in the country would have increased his herds of meat animals. It should also be borne in mind that the average estimated value of meat animals is their value on the farm, and not the wholesale or retail price. The farm value, or average price received on the farm, is much less than the wholesale prices and considerably less than the retail prices to consumers.

CHINESE EGGS BAD.

Information comes from the Pacific coast to the effect that the eggs imported from China are not good and the health authorities have been making an investigation. Dr. H. W. Wiley, former chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, is reported to have said the eggs from China are not suitable for table use.

Quoting from the San Francisco Bulletin:—"Chinese eggs are controlled by an impoverished race, existing on a wretchedly low standard of living and dwelling for the most part under extremely insanitary conditions. The Chinese producers get as low as 3½ cents a dozen, which jumps to 14 cents laid down in San Francisco and to 28 cents when sold to retailers and other large buyers. So far the competition between the American eggs and the Chinese eggs has been one of price only. If it were a competition of quality the American eggs could easily hold the market. California hens are fed on grains and cleanly kept, while it is charitable to draw a veil over the eugenics of Chinese egg production. Sanitation is a wild impossibility to Chinese poultry raisers and there is probably a certain amount of danger in the use of Chinese eggs."

If the eggs from Asiatic countries are not of such character that they may be consumed with impunity, importation of the same should be prevented.

THE MEANEST FISH.

After a most thorough investigation into the habits of the common eel, Hugh M. Smith, United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, has come to the conclusion that this little squirmy creature is the meanest and most cowardly of all fishes. The eel doesn't seem to have any courage at all, and when any of his neighbors show a disposition to fight, he scurries off as fast as he can and won't make a stand, even when approached by something smaller and weaker than himself. But he is always on hand to take advantage of some unfortunate fish that has become hopelessly entangled in a netting or is otherwise unable to defend itself. Hardly a good word can be said for the eel, other than that he makes a good food for us. But he destroys a lot of valuable food by his fondness for the spawn of certain fishes. He does all in his power to keep up the high cost of living. The principal sufferers from his depredations are the shad and the herring. Shad tastes particularly good to the eel, and his methods of feeding on this fish make him a great pest to fishermen. In streams where gill nets are laid, the sneaky little eel is at his best in causing trouble. As soon as a fish is caught in one of the nets, he hastens to the spot and begins picking away at the helpless victim and doesn't stop until he has consumed everything but the head and backbone. Very frequently when fishermen draw up the nets they find most of the catch to consist of heads and backbones of fish that have been attacked by the eels, and spawning shad caught in nets are often found completely emptied of roe, with the eels occupying a comfortable place in the interior of the fish.

WHERE DOCTORS DISAGREE.

A special dispatch from London to the Chicago Tribune says widespread interest is aroused in the declaration of Robert Mond, the well known scientific chemist, that sterilized milk is a dangerous food for children, especially since so high an authority as Sir Almroth Wright appears to support generally Mond's conclusion, suggesting the advisability that the whole question be made the subject of further scientific research under the direction of the government.

Mond's experiments for many years in the experimental dairy and in the infants' hospital tend to confirm Dr. Koch's assertion that tubercular infection is not conveyable in milk from cattle to human beings—an opinion which is opposed to the general medical belief.

Even more startling is his conclusion that sterilized condensed milk is dangerous to children because sterilization, by destroying the natural nutritive qualities of the fluid, weakens instead of nourishes the child, thus directly predisposing to tubercular infection.

One experiment consisted in feeding a number of kittens sterilized milk. All died of starvation within a fortnight. Similarly, a large number of infants fed exclusively on the same diet developed tuberculosis of the bovine type, whereas natural milk from tuberculous cows did not produce any symptoms of disease.

Sir Almroth Wright's conclusion is that the importance of excluding infection generally is exaggerated. He thinks well nourished children are able to resist or reject disease germs, and considers the nutritive value of milk undeniably affected by sterilization.

Dr. Ralph Vincent, in a book just published, entitled "Nutrition for the Infant," asserts that the use of sterilized milk and patent foods induces rickets, infantile scurvy and various intestinal disorders.

It is safe to prophesy that these opinions will lead to a battle royal between physicians. Meanwhile millions of anxious mothers the world over, for years advised by doctors to avoid unboiled milk, now find themselves warned by chemical experts against following the advice.

The immediate result of the controversy will probably be to create widespread doubts as to the value not only of boiled milk but of medical specialists' opinions, at the same time relieving the cow of much undeserved reproach.—Chicago Dairy Produce.

FOOD CONTROL AT ITS SOURCE.

At the meeting of the National Civic Federation held in New York recently, Dr. Carl Alsberg spoke by invitation of the sanitary and hygienic control of foods. Dr. Alsberg's ideas as expressed at this meeting represent what might be regarded as the new thought in the pure food world. That is to say, instead of spending so much money on police work, he would economize by spending money for prevention. If the food manufacturers can be made to observe good sanitary and hygienic laws there will be little food stuff on the markets for inspectors to seize.

Dr. Alsberg said:—There is but one need in food control which is so vastly more important than all others that I propose to urge it alone upon your consideration. It is adequate sanitary and hygenic control of food.

By the sanitary and hygienic control of foods I mean the prevention of traffic in foods dangerous to health. To prevent this traffic is far more difficult than to prevent mere fraud in food products. Fraud may usually be detected by a chemical analysis. The danger to health that can easily lurk in a food can easily be detected in this way unless, indeed the food contain some simple poison like arsenic or lead. If, however, the food be manufactured in unsanitary surroundings, or if it be the bearer of tuberculosis, typhoid, measles or scarlet fever, this can hardly be detected. Hence, in my opinion, foods such as butter and milk, fish, and shellfish which are capable of this kind of contamination, should receive the greatest attention.

The only safeguard against these sources of danger is inspection of the place of production and medical supervision of the workmen. It should be impossible, for example, for a dairyman with a case of typhoid fever in his family to ship milk.

Obviously the exercise of such control of the sanitary conditions of food production is a task for the individual states. I would, therefore, urge upon you to secure such sanitary control of food production in every state. I can conceive of nothing more important.

If such a sanitary control is to be established you must clearly understand that to be effective it must rest upon an adequate health service. Outside of our larger cities such a service is most unusual.

THE SANITARY SIGNIFICANCE OF BACTERIA IN MILK.

The following is taken from an address by Dr. Herbert D. Peas, of the Lederle Laboratories, New York, at the Conference of Milk Sanitation and Economics held by the International Milk Dealers Association:

In the early days of the bacteriological investigations of water supplies, the finding of typhoid fever bacteria in water appeared to be an easy matter. Later the development of bacterial knowledge cast so much doubt on the results of previous work that it became hazardous for the bacteriologist to claim that he had ever isolated pure typhoid bacteria from natural water. The condition has not entirely passed away, even to this date. During the early days of this skepticism the finding of colon bacillus in water became popular, and interpretations were freely made of the dangerous pollution of water when these bacilli were found. The assumption was that where B. Coli were present, there typhoid fever bacteria might also some time be present, for both appeared to have a comman origin in the intestines of man. Later, however, it was successfully demonstrated that B. Coli. also came from the manure of domestic animals, and then the basis for judging our water supply was again altered. Now it is generally conceded that not alone by the presence or absence of B. Coli. in water samples should a water supply be judged, but by the results of such examination taken in conjunction with the results of the most careful sanitary survey of drainage areas contributing to the water supplies in question. Moreover, there are usually included the results of chemical and other forms of investigation which might contribute valuable additional information. Today our water supplies are studied by broadly-trained experts in a thorough and comprehensive manner, and such studies always cover several methods of scientific analysis.

But has such elaboration of scientific investigation caused any undue delay in the sanitary improvement or protection of our water supplies? The conclusion is warranted that not only has no delay been occasioned, but rather the contrary, for with the advent of the more broadly trained scientists, or of groups of cooperating specialists, have come the quicker solutions of the real problems involved.

If now our bacterial counts do not indicate any menace from specific infection of milk, what can it be fairly said that they do indicate? The Federal Department of Agriculture has recently published a statement that the high bacterial count indicates that the milk is either dirty or old, or that it has not been held under refrigerating conditions. This is a fair statement of the facts, so far as it goes, but it leaves us with the necessity for considering what constitutes dirty milk, and what may be the sanitary significance of various degrees and kinds of dirtiness; also what of sanitary importance, if any, is there in old milk; also what is the health menace, if any, in even incubated milk.

In considering the significance of dirty milk, we again find ourselves at the simple beginning where we must recognize the fact that there is harmless or even beneficial dirt, and that which holds potentiality for disease. We must therefore distinguish between dirts. All competent bacterialogists agree that the dirt from human origin is the most dangerous, for all of the germs of the transmissable diseases of the human body must leave the afflicted individual.

All bacteriologists agree that the vast majority of the dirt bacteria in milk come from animal sources rather than human. The presence of the cow manure organisms predicates a far smaller sanitary menace to the milk, while the smaller number of human dirt bacteria of many times greater sanitary importance. Notwithstanding this, we find frequently that the greatest stress is laid upon the numbers of bacteria in milk, rather than upon the careful inspection and supervision of the details of methods of producing and handling of milk, the main object of which should be the exclusion of human dirt. We find, therefore, that the vast majority of the bacteria have real bovine origin and are of little significance; the minority are of human origin and are of far greater importance. Moreover, there exists no uniform numerical relationship between the numbers from these two sources. Here again we duplicate the conditions long ago recognized in passing judgment on water supplies. * * * * *

Most small towns and rural communities are without adequate health protection. The greatest need of the country today is an adequate staff of well trained, well paid full time health officials in every county in every State. With this must go laws that are enforced for the recording of vital statistics of communicable diseases. Until all this is done there can be no adequate sanitary control of foods. Just as long as we do nothing for the health of our country people just so long will typhoid and similar diseases be imported into our cities.

I fear you may think I have digressed upon the subject of food control. I hope, however, I have convinced you that the most dangerous foods can only be controlled where there is a good health service. If what I have said causes this great organization to act for a better rural health service, I shall feel that I have accomplished a great deal.

FARMER TO CONSUMER.

If the Post Office Department gets a recommendation adopted Uncle Sam will soon have made an attempt to do away with retailers and middlemen in the sale of country produce. The House Committee on Agriculture, according to the Grovers' Magazine, has committed itself to awarding $194,000 to finance the experiment. A plan is being considered by postal experts by which notices are to be posted in post offices serving farming sections and circulars distributed along rural routes advising the farmers fully of the facilities for the exchange of food by mail. The farmers are to be asked to post notices or otherwise inform the city people through postal channels what produce they have to sell and what they want for it. The farmers' advertising will be distributed by city mail carriers in bulletin form. In fine, a complete system of communication is established between the city housewife and the farmer. Kansas City is spoken of as one of the first cities for the experiment. Of course it goes without saying that the farmers will want just as much as the local merchants do. That was the case in Indianapolis where the attempt to cut out the middlemen proved such a collossal farce that the newspapers gave up their part of it in disgust. The newspapers of various cities expected that when the parcel post was adopted they would secure a lot of small advertisements from the farmers who would offer their produce at slightly lower prices to city consumers. This proved a mistaken notion.

The farmers wanted full retail prices, and no doubt when Uncle Sam's new cabbage delivery gets under way the same conditions will prevail and the retailers of produce will keep right on delivering conveniently the food to their city customers the same day if not the same hour customers phone for them.

FARMERS WHO KNOW.

While breaking the end of a boiled egg in a Londan restaurant Frederick C. Howe chanced upon the clue to a story that seems to reveal the secret of agricultural success for our American farmers as a class and point the way to a solution of the serious problem of food production, says the Literary Digest. Mr. Howe noticed some mysterious letters stamped on the egg, and asked the head waiter to explain their meaning. The waiter said the egg came from Denmark, and the stamp was a guarantee of freshness. "England, you know," he added, "buys her eggs, butter and bacon from Denmark. The English people use their land for hunting, sir." The head waiter told Mr. Howe of the struggle of the Danish farmers against poor soil, bad weather and many other difficulties and explained that by using the best methods of soil cultivation, dairying and poultry raising, and by selling their products and buying supplies through co-operative societies, they achieved prosperity for themselves and reduced poverty to the minimum in the towns and cities. The prospect of finding a good story to bring back to America looked favorable to Mr. Howe, and he immediately set out to dig up the facts. What he discovered is contained in the Metropolitan Magazine from which is quoted in part as follows:—

I went down into the heart of old London, down into the crooked streets near the Bank of England, through which the uttermost portions of the earth pulsate, and finally found the offices of the Danish Export Society. The head waiter had told me all about it, too. I found that his story was correct. The office was not unlike a thousand other offices, only it was run for the farmers of Denmark. It was the London agency for the co-operative society through which millions of Danish farm produce are distributed to Great Britain every year. A private company had previously had the contract, but it became a monopoly. Then it cut down the prices it paid the Danes for their bacon and raised the prices to consumers in England. This was bad for the farmers; it was bad for their reputation. So the farmers got together and organized the co-operative export society to sell their own produce to their own customers. By so doing they kept the profit to themselves. They also proected their trade mark by insuring goods that were up to the standard.

My interest in Denmark increased. Here was a country that really seemed to have learned a way to put monopoly out of business without putting anybody in jail. The next day I was in Hamburg, and after a daylight journey across Denmark I landed in Copenhagen. And as I crossed the sandy country, dotted with villages and innumerable school houses and churches, I got an impression of the hard struggle of the people against poverty; for the soil was obviously far from fertile.

But I did not rest in Copenhagen. I traveled on to the village where the farmer lived whose number I had copied from the shell of the egg in London. There was no great difficulty about it, and the co-operative egg society aided me. For each farmer has a number which enables his eggs to be identified. I finally found the village, and to my delight the farmer spoke English, as do many other Danes. He was greatly interested that an American should come to Denmark and he told me the story of his country, and of his own life, which, as I found was not unlike that of a hundred thousand other peasants.

His farm was only fifteen acres, but it was above the average in size; for out of a total of 248,000 farms in the country, 133,000 are of less then 13½ acres, while only 8,000 are of more than 150 acres. There are 68,000 farms which average less than half an acre each. These are the farms of the Husmand, the men who work their own little places and are employed as hands on the estates of the large farmers. I found that a man on five acres made a very decent living for himself and his family. He had some cows and a dozen or more pigs. He produced his own vegetables and exported eggs and poultry along with his richer neighbor. But the Husmand is not a "peasant." He is really an agricultural laborer with a little patch of land of his own. Only those who own a larger farm of from 13 to 50 acres, like that of my host, are called peasants. They are not like the peasants of Germany or the farmers of England, for they almost all own their land.

There is little tenancy in Denmark; far less than in the United States. Over 89 per cent. of the farmers own their own land. About 11 per cent. are in the hands of tenants. This is one explanation of the well-being of the country. This is one reason why the Danes are such good farmers. They work for themselves and have no fear of having their rent increased when they improve their farms, as they do in England, in Belgium, and, unfortunately to an increasing extent in America as well.

Denmark, I learned, was not unlike all other countries of Europe a generation ago. The farmers were ignorant and poor. When Germany took Schleswig-Holstein, the choicest part of the country, in 1864, the patriotism of the country was aroused. They saw that they must make the most of their little country. The changes began with a new system of education, from which we might learn much in America. It was designed to stimulate interest in agriculture and things that people use in their daily lives. The school is a mirror of life and is planned as such. I attended one of the high schools which are unlike any other schools I have ever seen. The courses are of five months duration, and the boys and men attend in the winter, and the girls in the summer. The students are of all ages. There are no examinations and no text-books, and there is no uniformity in the courses offered. But I found the most wonderful enthusiasm. Nobody watched the clock. Work continued all day and even into the evening. Danish literature was taught, as were bookkeeping and business. There were classes in dairying, chemistry and the management of co-operative societies. Danish history was emphasized, for the original motive of the school was patriotism. In the evening old and young sat around the big school room and sang songs. They sat around the teacher in the classroom eagerly absorbing his suggestions.

To attend one of these schools is the ambition of the peasants. To this they look forward. For it they save. There are forty-two of these high schools in the little State of but two and a half million people and with an area about the size of Massachusetts. The tuition, which includes board and residence, for the five months is but forty dollars, and the minimum age of entrance is eighteen years, so that the students are all mature. These high schools are important as far as they go, but they are only a part of the educational system. Denmark, says Mr. Howe, is the best educated country in the world. The total illiterates are only two one-hundredths of one per cent. as compared with seven one-hundredths in Germany. He goes on to say:

Just as in our own Wisconsin democracy seems to begin its work by making war in ignorance. It is said that a Danish peasant will go without his breakfast rather than a morning paper and will walk many miles to attend a political meeting. The Danes have a passion for politics and education. The State sends out teachers who talk to the women about domestic science and dairying. Lecturers go out from the university to teach history and farm management, accounting and everything of value to the peasant. My friends had clearly defined opinions along almost every political question under the sun and a remedy at hand for most of them. He had the most diversified knowledge of farming, of live stock, of agricultural chemistry. He was like an American baseball fan in his intimate and interesting knowledge of things. Farming was his life. He was saturated with it in a way that made it real culture. This was quite as true of others. They talked about the care of pigs and cattle as a bibliophile glows over a rare edition. Farm life is full of interest to the Dane.

Here was a second explanation of Denmark. The people are all educated and they are educated for their particular needs. Out of vocational training culture has come as a by-product.

Now it would seem to be a task for a Sherlock Holmes to trace an egg like millions of other eggs, from a restaurant in New York to a farm in Illinois. But it had been very easy to trace this Danish egg from the heart of London to another country. For my peasant friend was a member of the Co-operative Egg Association, which covers all Denmark and maintains a foreign office in London, like any other big private business. The association has 40,000 peasant members, who act together, buy and sell together, and run their co-operative busines amounting to $6,000,000 a year, by little groups in the villages, and by a central executive committee in Copenhagen. Each week eggs are collected from the farmers whose mark they bear with the date of delivery, so that any complaint can be traced. The eggs are first gathered by circles, then by districts. They are finally sent to Copenhagen for export. The collection is not unlike the postal service in its operation. Each farmer is credited by the association with the eggs delivered by him and is paid at the priced realized in London, less the expense of delivery, which amounts to very little, because all the middlemen have been eliminated; the farmer really sells directly to the customer. The eggs must be strictly fresh. They are submitted to examination by electric light, and if the eggs are not up to a standard the farmer is fined.

In consequence of their quality Danish eggs bring fancy prices. They are better packed than any others and are carefully graded. By these means the Danish farmer has increased the price of his eggs just as he has more than doubled the price of his butter by the same careful attention to details.

When the co-operative movement started the excess of eggs exported over those imported amounted to over $2,000,000; by 1909 it had increased to over $7,000,000 a year. During the same period the number of fowls increased from 5,900,000 to 11,800,000. We are taught to believe that efficiency can only be secured by monopoly. It is assumed that any co-operative control of industry must be wasteful. Yet the million and a half farmers of Denmark disprove this. On their own initiative they have organized themselves into every kind of co-operative business, to carry on transactions which run into the millions of dollars every year. They do it with the economy and efficiency of the most highly organized private business. And they do it through co-operation, not socialism. They buy what they need at wholesale and sell it to themselves at retail in the same way. Thus the farmer gets all that he makes. He has got rid of one middleman after another, and deals almost as directly with his customers as did his ancestors a hundred years ago at the village fair.

I found co-operation everywhere. The movement is only thirty years old, but in that time Denmark has been changing from a barren country in which the peasants are not different from those in Germany, into the world's agricultural experimental station. Little by little I learned the story of the transformation; a story that makes poverty seem a crime in a country with the resources of our own; a story that suggests a vision of the unfathomed possibilities and talents of the ordinary man. Further than this it shows how easily poverty can be cured by law rather than by charity, and this is the big thing this little country teaches to all the world.

The change began with butter and cheese. Prior to 1881, each farmer made his own butter and marketed it, just as he does in many parts of America today. Finally a number of farmers got together and erected a co-operative dairy. The success was so immediate that other farmers followed suit. In thirty years' time 1,200 co-operative dairies had been built by the peasants with a membership of 158,000 farmers, who own three-quarters of the cattle of Denmark. There is a creamery for every three miles of territory. Nearly 95 per cent. of the farmers owning cattle are members of these co-operative dairies.

Then the individual creameries were organized into districts, which later formed a central organization for handling the product for export.

England is poorer by a million dollars a week because she fails to butter her own bread. This is the sum she pays Denmark for butter alone.

The bacon business was a by-product of the co-operative dairy. The skim milk from the dairy was a loss, so the thrifty farmer delivers fresh milk to the dairy to be made into butter and cheese and brings back skim milk to the farm to be fed to the hogs. But the hogs had to be slaughtered, and the private slaughter houses were costly and unsatisfactory. So the peasants organized co-operative societies and built their own slaughter houses. Today there are 105,000 members of the co-operative slaughter houses, which kill each year 1,500,000 hogs, representing a value of $25,300,000. There are thirty-six slaughter houses in the country, with a capital of $2,360,000. It was found that some hogs produced more bacon than others, so the government which is run for and by the peasants, sent out experts who traveled from village to village to instruct the farmers as to the kind of hogs to raise and the best way to slaughter them.

Then it was found that a trust had been formed in London which controlled the market and paid the farmers whatever price it chose to fix for their bacon. So the peasants formed a trust of their own. They organized the Danish Bacon Company of London to sell their output directly to the consumer. They put the trust out of business and appropriated all the profits themselves.

Denmark, I learned, is a free trade country. The peasants are free traders. They want to buy wherever they can buy the cheapest and are willing themselves to submit to competition of other lands. There are cost-of-living investigations in Denmark and no monopolies. Nor are there any millionaires or swollen fortunes. found that the government owned the railroads and operated them for the peasants. Freight rates are adjusted to encourage the export trade for the special benefit of the farmers. The ownership of the railroads encourages the peasant to control his business by freeing him from extortion or discrmination, while the co-operative societies own steamships, so that the farmer really delivers directly from the farm to the consumer. At the end of each year all the profits of the co-operative society are distributed back to the members according to the amount of their respective sales, on the one hand, or their purchases on the other.

STORY OF A GRAIN OF CORN.

The following article appearing in a recent issue of the Retailers' Journal was written by C. F. Langworthy and Caroline L. Hunt:

The intelligent use of a given food material, such, for example, as Indian corn, calls for some knowledge of its nature, properties, and food value, and also some understanding of the possibilities of its use as compared with other foods which make up the ordinary dietary. The increasing variety of foods at the disposal of the housekeeper, resulting from improved methods of agriculture and marketing, from more extended food manufacture, and from the introduction of new foods is contributing pleasing and healthful variety to the diet. It also offers a temptation to complicate the diet to a degree undesirable from the point of view of either health or economy of time. In the face of this temptation intelligent housekeepers and those who cater wisely to larger groups of people, in schools or other institutions, are seeking to secure the advantages, without the disadvantages, of the large number of available foods which include the old and well tried as well as the new.

If the meals of the average family are analyzed, each will be found to contain one or more foods—meat, fish, poultry, cheese or a legume—distinguished from others by a high percentage of tissue-forming material; one or more foods distinguished by others by a high percentage of fat—butter, oil or cream; and one or more foods—bread perhaps, or potato or rice or some prepared cereal—distinguished from others by a high percentage of starch. This by no means exhausts the groups, but it goes far enough to suggest how a meal is usually made up and also to point out that variety, can be secured in two ways, either by multiplying the representatives of the various groups in each meal (serving meat and fish at the same meal, for example or potatoes and rice), or by limiting the representatives of each group and varying them from meal to meal. By the latter means variety would be secured through a succession of simple means differing among themselves. The choice between the two methods must be determined to a large extent by the needs and tastes of the family or group, for which the catering is done, but there can be no doubt that there is a tendency toward simplifying the individual meal and toward varying what we may call the "constants" from meal to meal or from day to day. In order to do this a person must understand the various foods sufficiently well to be able to group them on the basis of their special uses.

It does not necessarily follow that multiplying the representatives of any given group means that one overeats of this group. With potatoes, rice and sweet potatoes at the same meal, one would probably eat little more of all together than he would of one alone. He would surely secure more varied and well selected meals if vegetables of different type were served with one carbohydrate food instead of three carbohydrates at the same time. The assumption sometimes made in popular literature that the body is harmed by having several kinds of starch, for instance, supplied at any one meal, like other such statements, apparently has no foundation in fact.

The purpose of this bulletin is not to recommend Indian corn to the exclusion of other foods of its group, the cereals, which include wheat, rice, rye and others, but to speak of its value, as a food and its distinguishing qualities which call for special methods of cooking, and to show how it may be used to secure in variety one of the principal lines of food materials which make up the usual dietary.

Indian corn has a special historical interest for Americans from the fact that it is usually recognized as being native to American soil. It was originally a tropical or sub-tropical plant, but the Indians, though unconscious of the trend of their attempts to extend corn growing, nevertheless succeeded in evolving varities which would ripen as far north as Canada. Its cultivation and use, therefore, even in the early days were very widely distributed in America. With fish and game it made the staple food of the Indians and except for wild rice, which grew very abundantly in shallow fresh waters, and the seeds of certain wild grasses (both used in relatively small quantities) it was the only cereal known to them.

In all the history of America corn has played an important part. The desire to produce it was probably the incentive which most frequently led the Indians to abandon nomadic life and to form settlements. Because of the quickness and ease with which it can be raised, it was doubtless, too, the means of saving from starvation many of the pioneers who came from other lands to settle here. So important was this food in the days when the country was being settled, that both Indians and colonists often found it more efficacious to destroy the corn crops of their adversaries than to make open war upon them.

After the discovery of America the use of corn spread rapidly to other countries, and it is now very generally raised in all regions of the world where it will flourish. So generally has it come into use that it ranks with wheat, rye, barley, oats and rice as one of the food grains of the world and may be called the American Indian's greatest gift to modern civilization.

On the basis of very numerous studies it can be stated the different varieties of corn differ little among themselves in nutritive value, and that when fully ripened and matured the corn crops of various parts of the world are practically identical in composition. The average composition of corn refined and dried for grinding is given as follows: water, 10.8 per cent.; protein, which of special interest because it is the nutrient which builds and repairs the tissues of the body, 10 per cent.; fat, 4.3 per cent.; starch and sugar, which with fat are the chief sources of energy, 71.7 per cent.; crude fiber, 1.7 per cent., and mineral matter, 1.5 per cent. The fuel value, or as it is often called, the energy value, is 1795 calories per pound. When the composition is compared with the average composition of the common foodstuffs which make up the diet of the majority of people—meat, dairy products, vegetables, fruits, etc.—it is found to have a low water content, a low fat content, a fairly high protein content, a very high percentage of carbohydrates (chiefly starch) and very close to the average amount of mineral matter.

Few people wish to remember the composition of foods exactly, but many, particularly and others who are interested practically in the food supplies of families or other groups, wish to keep in mind in a general way the composition of the foods which they handle. For such people it will be sufficient to think of the composition of corn in terms of tenths, seven of the tenths being starch, one protein, one water, the other tenth being divided among fat, crude fiber and mineral matter.

A detailed comparison of the composition of Indian corn and other cereal grains shows that these cereals differ little among themselves in composition—so little in fact that save where great accuracy is sought they can be considered as group of interchangeable foods so far as their nutritive value is concerned. The average percentage of protein in them is 11, the extremes being 8 and 13 per cent. Indian corn which has on an average 10 per cent. protein falls slightly below the average for the group. Its fuel, or energy value, on the other hand, is the highest of the cereals included in the list being approximately 1,800 per pound, or about 100 calories above the average. An explanation of this is found in the percentage of fat, which is 4.3 per cent., the average in the cereals being about 2.5 per cent.

As regards colors there are many varieties of corn—white, yellow, red, blue and black. There is also some difference in the flavor of the different sorts, but, contrary to general belief, these varieties are, on the average, practically identical in composition, and differ little in nutritive value. White corn meal is, as a rule, a little milder in flavor than yellow. The preference for one sort or another, however, is a personal matter seems to be determined very largely by locality.

AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION OF OHIO.

Columbus.

DAIRY AND FOOD DIVISION.

S. E. STRODE, Commissioner in Charge.

PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, investigation made by this department discloses the fact that the farmers and poultry raisers of Ohio suffer an annual loss of approximately one and one-half million dollars in the production of eggs that are inferior in quality, due to fertilization, which produces in commercial eggs conditions commonly known and understood as heated eggs, blood rings, and chick rots that make them unwholesome for food, and

Whereas, after the hatching season is over there is no longer necessity for keeping the rooster with the laying hens, as repeated experiments have demonstrated that hens lay, as well or better, without the presence of the rooster, therefore, I, Sylvanus E. Strode, Commissioner in Charge of the Dairy and Food Division of the Ohio Agricultural Commission, do hereby designate Saturday, June 6th, 1914, as

ROOSTER DAY.

Let us, the five million producers and consumers of Ohio, on this day separate the rooster from his flocks, by decapitation or other means, and thereby contribute to the production of quality eggs. Better than we should enjoy his sweet morsel on our tables and bless him for having fulfilled his mission then to tolerate longer his presence among the flocks and thereby suffer the losses that ensue.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the Agricultural Commission of Ohio to be affixed at Columbus, this sixth day of May, in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and fourteen.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

Reports of butter shipments to San Francisco, Cal., amounting to 22,741,000 pounds in 1913, show a falling off for the year as compared with the preceding year. The average price for 1913 was 30.8 cents higher than in 1911, but lower than in 1910 and 1909. The Pacific Dairy Review attributes the slump to local over supply, decreased consumption and incoming foreign butter.

"Fifty per cent. of the cows in this country do not pay," said Mr. Van Pelt at the Vermont Dairy meeting. He believes it is not all their fault. "Under proper handling and feeding a great percentage can be made to show a profit," he said, "then by keeping records you will know whether or not she is making you a profit."

Dairy farmers shipping milk into Omaha, Neb., gave until June 1 to whitewash their barns, install more window space and otherwise improve their cow barns. Inspection of barns has been started and the necessary improvements ordered. Shiping of milk will be prohibited unless the orders are obeyed. The dairymen must have a milk house or tank for cooling the milk, and water-proof floors and gutters built. One window for each cow is ordered.

Recent discoveries show that most fish really sleep, and they sleep with their eyes open. All species except those which seek food at night or lie buried under stones, rest.

The Canadian Fisherman, published at Montreal, is a new sea food publication. It is a monthly publication, edited by F. William Wallace.

The Milk Reporter:—Pure, sweet, wholesome skim milk, is not allowed to be sold in the counties of New York and Kings, State of New York, until it becomes sour by accumulating a billion or so to the cubic inch of good, bad and indifferent bacteria. Stir it up with a stick or something equally effective and you have buttermilk which the health department receives with open arms as a wholesome and valuable food that may be sold raw.

The Department of Agriculture through the Bureau of Chemistry has given notice to the manufacturers of canned beans or pork and beans that it regards the practice of using culls or other beans which are old or musty or otherwise decomposed in these products as manifestly contrary to section 7, paragraph 6, of the Food and Drugs act. Notice is also given that the use of tomato sauce or pulp which is composed of decomposed tomato or trimming stock, in the preparation of baked beans or other food products with tomato sauce is also considered a violation of the law.

A combination of corn and bran has been found to make the best flavored milk, by the United States Department of Agriculture. The Department has jus' finished a series of interesting experiments, conducted to ascertain how different combinations affected the flavor of milk. Six cows were used in the experiment. Out of fifty opinions expressed twenty-five flavored the milk from cows fed the corn and bran ration; sixteen the milk from cows getting crushed oats, while nine expressed no preference.

PENNSYLVANIA DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

DAIRY AND FOOD BUREAU.

Revised Rule No. 5 and Regulation for the enforcement of the provisions of the Food Act of Pennsylvania, approved the 13th day of May, A. D. 1909.

RULE No. 5, REVISED. COLORS.—The use of any dye, harmless or otherwise, to color or stain a food in a manner whereby damage or inferiority is concealed, or whereby the food is made to appear of better or greater value than it is, is specifically prohibited by law.

Issued May 27th, 1914.

JAMES FOUST,
Dairy and Food Commissioner.

WORKING FOR CLEANER FOOD.

In this number of the Bulletin will be found several articles of considerable importance concerning the display of food products, the protection of the same from contamination by dust, flies or other things, and the wrapping of bread by bakers, grocers and other venders. These include a letter by the officers of the Civic Club, of the City of Philadelphia, addressed to Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust, together with a few illustrations of the careless and unsanitary manner in which bread is handled, with letters of approval by various other clubs and associations of the city; Commissioner Foust's reply to the Civic Club; result of a conference held in Philadelphia at which representatives of the Civic Club, of the City Health Department and of the Dairy and Food Department, including the Commissioner, were present; an opinion by General Counsel Woodward, concurred in by the Attorney General's Department; a letter from Health Officer Wright, of Erie, transmitting an opinion by the common pleas court of Erie county, Judge F. A. Benson presiding, in which the right of the city of Erie, acting through its Board of Health, to adopt a regulation requiring the wrapping of bread sold by bakers, grocers or others was affirmed. The conclusion of the whole matter is that existing laws do not give the Dairy and Food Commissioner the power to make the regulations asked for by the Civic Club and others; that such power now inheres in the various city governments, but that if it is to be exercised by the Dairy and Food Bureau present laws must be amended in the direction indicated in Commissioner Foust's letter to the officers of the Civic Club and in Mr. Woodward's opinion.

The Bulletin has frequently recognized the powerful influence exerted by the women's clubs of Pennsylvania and of the country at large, and it realizes that much valuable assistance has been rendered by their members, either officially or in their private capacity in the way of banishing adulterated food products from our markets, not only in aiding to enforce the laws, but also in creating a decided sentiment against criminal or careless procedure in the manufacture or sale of food. The state is very heavily in their debt, and the Dairy and Food Commissioner would gladly do all he can to aid them in the praiseworthy work they have undertaken. In this particular instance, they will be obliged to secure better legislative enactments or local rules by the several boards of health. Of course State action is preferable and it should be invoked not only by the ladies but by all citizens who prefer clean bread and other foods. A little united action will accomplish much.

LETTER FROM THE CIVIC CLUB.

Civic Club of Philadelphia,
Office 1300 Spruce Street,
Philadelphia, March 7, 1914.

Hon. James Foust, Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Commissioner,
Department of Agriculture, Harrisburg, Pa.:

Dear Sir: The food question is one that "affects 100 per cent. of the people 100 per cent. of the time," and women naturally have a keen interest in all that concerns the food supply, especially when they are organized for that purpose. We have been trying for some time to obtain a more sanitary delivery and sale of foods in Philadelphia, but are handicapped at the very beginning by the fact that there is no direct law to which we can turn for authority. We particularly refer to the display on the streets of foods that are to be eaten without peeling or cooking and in some instances, such as figs, dates, etc., without washing, and which are absolutely unprotected from flies, dust and dirt. This display is made by large and small dealers alike.

Investigation shows that about seventeen states have laws or regulations providing for the sanitary display and handling of foods and in ten of these states, sidewalk displays of such foods as are eaten in the raw state are prohibitive unless they are fully protected from flies, dust and dirt, and raised above the sidewalks eighteen inches or two feet. Netting is not considered sufficient. Investigation also shows that, with very few exceptions, this question is covered, not by direct laws, but by regulations or rulings of either food commissioners or boards of health, made under no more specific laws than we have in Pennsylvania.

May we call your attention to the wording of Ruling No. 8, which reads as follows:

> "Meats, preserves and similar food substances that are likely to be contaminated by exposure to flies and other insects or exposed to the dust of the street or the store. Under the provisions of the 6th Clause of Section 3 of the Act, an article of food is adulterated where the same is an animal or vegetable substance produced, stored, transported or kept in a way or manner that would render the article diseased, contaminated or unwholesome. Under this Clause of the Act, meats, preserves and similar food substances that are likely > to be contaminated by exposure to flies and other insects or exposed to the dust of the street or store will be required to be kept screened so as to prevent all contamination."

It may be argued that it will be necessary to prove contamination in every instance and thus make the trial of these cases very expensive, but it seems to us that the word "likely" in the above ruling will cover this point, as it does not say "if it is contaminated," but "that are likely" to be contaminated. Besides, we believe that if the dealers knew that a ruling of this kind was being enforced they would comply with it voluntarily, but they will not until they know they have to do it.

We would, therefore, respectively urge you to enforce the above ruling, or, if you think better, to issue a new one similar to that issued by other states, setting forth definitely the kind of foods to be protected, the manner of screening them and requiring the foods to be raised above the level of the floor or sidewalk.

We are glad to recognize your interest in the subject and wish to assure you of our desire to co-operate in putting Pennsylvania and especially Philadelphia, abreast of the times in the matter of clean food as our city is now in regard to pure foods.

We also beg to call your attention to the matter of the unsanitary delivery of bread, which is surely a vegetable substance and is transported through the streets, and so would come under Rule 8. The bread delivered from wagons by the single loaf to the individual consumer should be wrapped, but that delivered in quantity to stores and restaurants could be placed in dust tight containers inside the bakeries before being put on the wagons.

We are enclosing a few instances of the delivery of bread observed by our members. The conditions noted in the instances quoted are not altogether the fault of the driver. It is practically impossible for the driver to keep his hands clean while on his delivery route, and risk of contamination can be avoided by having the bread protected in such a way that he need not touch the uncovered bread.

And comparison of the rulings of the different States would, we are sure, result in securing for Pennsylvania a reasonable regulation covering these articles of food. The dust season is always with us, but we respectfully urge as early action as possible before the fly season is also upon us.

Respectfully submitted,

ANNA BLAKISTON DAY,
Acting President of Civic Club.

NELLIE FLORENCE LEE,
Chairman Pure Food Committee.

A FEW INSTANCES OF UNSANITARY HANDLING OF BREAD.

(These all occurred on wagons of the most reputable bakers.)

A man was seen to use the sleeve of his coat in place of a handkerchief and then fill the same arm and sleeve with loaves of bread to carry into a store.

A driver slipped in getting out of his wagon with a basket of bread and dumped it all out into the street. In picking it up, so that it would be nice and clean, he blew the street dirt off of each loaf and biscuit with his breath; another driver did the same with his pies before taking them into a store on Ninth Street.

A man was seen delivering bread, picking up the loaves to take into a house, with hands covered with scabs.

A horse was seen being fed out of the box in which the bread is packed when it leaves the bakery. It is to be hoped the box was thoroughly cleaned before being refilled. But how do we know it was?

At the rear of one of the bakeries there is a small street where the wagons back up to be loaded with bakers' products each morning. On the opposite side of this street there are small houses. The people living in these houses empty their dirty water into this street and it splashes on or near the bread, waiting to be packed into the wagons. How could it splash on the bread or even near it? Simply because the bread with absolutely no protection, not even paper or a board, was piled on the pavement before it was put on the wagon.

ENDORSING THE CIVIC CLUB LETTER.

The New Century Club,

COMMISSIONER FOUST'S REPLY.

Harrisburg, Pa., March 10, 1914.

Mrs. Frank Mills Day, Acting President, Civic Club of Philadelphia, 1300 Spruce Street, Philadelphia, Pa.:

Dear Madam:—Your favor of the 7th instant addressed to me was duly received. You call attention to Rule 8 of this Department, and suggest that the rule should be changed and also suggest that this Department should enforce the above ruling.

This Department is in entire sympathy with the members of the Civic Club in endeavoring to bring about better sanitation in the delivery and handling of foods and will do anything we can under the law to aid you in that regard, but the Dairy and Food Commissioner cannot go beyond the letter of the law, and the only power which he has to justify the making of Rule 8 is the power contained in Article VI of Section 3 of the Act of May 13, 1909, (P. L. 520), entitled "An act relating to Foods, etc.," a copy of which I enclose. That section provides that an article shall be deemed adulterated if it is "kept in a way or manner that would render the article diseased, contaminated or unwholesome." The word which you seem to take exception to is the word "likely" in the rule. Personally, I confess that I do not understand the point which you make. The first part of Rule 8 states positively that food is adulterated if "kept in a way or manner that would render the article diseased, contaminated or unwholesome." The next part of the Clause is intended to warn dealers that meats, preserves and similar food substances are likely to be contaminated by exposure to flies and other insects, and that they should be so kept as to prevent the contamination which is referred to in the first part of the rule, and I cannot see how the rule could be made any stronger and still keep within the power conferred upon me by law. I agree with you that this Department should be, perhaps, invested with larger powers in this regard, but until the Department is so invested I cannot assume authority which I do not have. I can only enforce the law by bringing criminal prosecutions, and whenever a criminal prosecution is brought I must prove beyond all reasonable doubt that the article is contaminated.

You will readily see how it is almost impossible to get such proof in the case of contamination by flies or dust, unless the food has been kept so long as to become putrefied.

Permit me to suggest that there is abundant power in the City of Philadelphia to correct this whole situation, and if the city councils, by ordinance, would pass a proper regulation empowering its local Department of Health and Charities to enforce such regulation, the very commendable purpose which you aim at would be accomplished.

Very truly yours,

JAMES FOUST,

RESULTS OF A CONFERENCE.

The Civic Club of Philadelphia having asked the Dairy and Food Commissioner to consider whether he could not, under the Pure Food Act of 1909, promulgate regulations requiring that bakers wrap bread before delivery and that foods such as are not usually wrapped before being eaten, if exposed for sale on the sidewalk, be kept upon stands raised several feet above the sidewalk and covered in such manner as would protect them from dust and flies.

A conference was held at 10:30 A. M., Thursday, March 19th, at the office of the Director of Public Health and Charities of Philadelphia, attended by ladies representing the Civic Club and other womens' organizations of that city, Acting Director Wilson, of the City Health Department and by Commissioner Foust, General Counsel Woodward, State Chemists Frear and LaWall, and Bacteriologist Rosenberger, of Jefferson Medical College, representing the State Dairy and Food Bureau.

The State officials expressed their sense of the need for the protection sought and desire to use the powers conferred upon the Bureau as far as they could properly be made to go, to aid the food consumer. It was concluded, however, under the advice of the Attorney General's Department and of General Counsel for the Bureau, that these powers were not sufficient to enable the Commissioner to establish and enforce such regulations as were here in question; and, further, that under the language of the Act of 1909, to secure conviction of offenders, it was necessary to prove, not merely that the conditions under which bread and fruit were distributed or offered for sale, were such as might result in disease, contamination or unwholesomeness, but that the particular sample of food purchased had in fact become diseased, contaminated or unwholesome by reason of the conditions under which it had been kept, transported and sold. Proof of this kind, the experts agreed, was highly difficult to establish except the extreme cases.

The ladies were advised that under present conditions of State legislation, there were but three remedies:

(1) By pressure of public sentiment cause bakers and merchants to effect the desired changes without legislation.

(2) To secure the passage of a suitable ordinance by the City Council, making the desired requirements and empowering the City Department of Health to enforce them.

(3) To secure from the Legislature a broadening of the scope of the Pure Food Act so that the Commissioner may be empowered to do what is desired in these matters.

OPINION BY GENERAL COUNSEL WOODWARD.

Hon. James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner, Harrisburg, Pa.:

Sir:—I am asked by you for my opinion on the following questions:

First. "Under the laws, the enforcement of which are committed to the Dairy and Food Commissioner, can the wrapping of bread, so as to prevent possible contamination in the handling thereof be compelled?"

Second. "Can the dealer in foods be compelled to keep such food when exposed in his store, or displayed in front thereof, covered so as to protect the same from flies and other insects, from the dust of the store or street, and from other possible contamination?

Third. "Has the Dairy and Food Commissioner the power by the making and promulgation of a rule or rules, to require of dealers the wrapping of bread and the protection of exposed food in the store or while on display in front of the store?"

A careful examination of all the food laws, the enforcement of which is devolved upon the Dairy and Food Commissioner, discloses that there is no law under which the matters suggested in your questions can be controlled, unless it be by virtue of the 6th sub-section or paragraph of Section 3 of the General Food Act of May 13th 1909. (P. L. 520).

Section 3 of the Act of 1909 is the Section of that Act defining adulteration. There are six sub-sections or paragraphs in this section, each defining a form of adulteration. Read in connection with the first Clause of Section 3, the 6th sub-section is as follows:

> "That for the purposes of this Act an article of food shall be deemed to be adulterated—
> "Sixth. If it consists of, or is manufactured in whole or in part from a diseased, contaminated, filthy or decomposed substance, either animal or vegetable; or an animal or vegetable substance produced, stored, transported or kept in a way or manner that would render the article diseased, contaminated or unwholesome; or if it is any part of the product of a diseased animal, or the product of an animal that has died otherwise than by slaughter."

So far as I know, there is no interpretation by any court of the language of this paragraph. There are many decisions touching other provisions, clauses and sections of the food law, but none, that construe this particular paragraph. We are, therefore, compelled to construe this paragraph according to the general and well known rules of interpretation that apply to the construction of statutes of this character, being neither limited nor enlightened by any authoritative construction adopted by our courts.

The matters embraced in your first two questions can very well be considered together, as any construction placed upon the paragraph in question that would enable us to say that the wrapping of bread to prevent possible contamination can be compelled, would also lead us to the conclusion that the exposure of food to flies, other insects, dust and other contamination can likewise be prevented or punished. Let us then consider the question as to whether, by virtue of the paragraph quoted, the matters which are the subject of complaint can be regulated.

The particular language to which our attention must be directed is that contained in the second clause of the paragraph, viz:

> "or an animal or vegetable substance produced, stored, transported or kept in a way or manner that would render the article diseased, contaminated or unwholesome."

The manifest meaning of this Clause is, that an article of food shall be deemed to be adulterated when it is, "an animal or vegetable substance produced, stored, transported or kept in a way or manner that would render the article diseased, contaminated or unwholesome." This particular Clause seems to stand independent of the Clause immediately preceding it, and to define, of itself, a species of adulteration. In like manner it seems to be disconnected from the Clause that follows. In fact the sixth paragraph of Section 3 seems to define three different forms or kinds of adulteration.

The difficulty in relation to this Clause is not alone a difficulty of construction. The language of the Clause seems clear enough. The difficulty largely arises when an attempt is made to bring any case clearly within the language of the Section or Clause. The difficulty is, therefore, largely one of proof. If it can be proven to the satisfaction of the court and jury that an article of the kind mentioned is "produced, stored, transported or kept in a way or manner that would render the article diseased, contaminated or unwholesome" then your case is made out, otherwise not. The only method of enforcing the Act in question being by a criminal prosecution, (see Section 7 of the Act) the facts necessary to conviction must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt. Nothing can be left to conjecture in prosecutions under this Act. Your proof must be indubitable.

Suppose the case of wrapping bread. Is there any scientist who will testify that because bread has been delivered unwrapped, it has thereby been rendered contaminated or unwholesome, or that it would thereby be rendered contaminated or unwholesome? There is by no means that certainty of contamination by reason of handling which will enable the scientist to testify that the bread would be contaminated. The very best he can say is that it might be, or may be. The word would used in this Clause, implies that the result must follow as an almost inevitable consequence. It is not probability but certainty that is required to be proven. I think you could prove the probability of contamination, but you surely cannot prove that contamination will inevitably result.

Does not the question as to whether the conditions surrounding the keeping, etc., of an article of food would render it diseased, contaminated or unwholesome, manifestly, turn upon the question as to whether it did in fact so render it? How can you say that such conditions would unless they have, and have in every case where examination has been made? And is not the very best evidence of what would happen that which you find did happen? Are you not, therefore, forced back to the position that you must prove that the article in question, by reason of the way of handling the same, has in fact become diseased, contaminated or unwholesome—in other words, adulterated?

If this be the position in which you are forced, again you are met by difficulty as to proof. For example, a scientist examines bread that has been delivered unwrapped. He finds certain bacteria. You ask him if these bacteria are present because of the way the bread has been handled. The best he can say is, usually, that their presence may be accounted for in that way. He will be compelled to admit that bacteria are present in the flour of which the bread is made, on the machinery and tools used in its manufacture, in the air of the bakery, in fact, everywhere; and it is seldom, if ever, that you will be able to identify the bacteria found on the bread as bacteria that must have been communicated to the bread from the hands of the person or persons handling the same. Science has its limitations, and in our present state of scientific knowledge, the prosecution to conviction of cases of the character suggested is practically impossible.

That the construction of this Clause of paragraph six herein indicated, is the proper construction, is further shown by the last paragraph of Section 5 of the Act, viz.: "but if said person shall violate the provisions of paragraph 6, Section 3, of this Act, by having stored, or transported or kept said article, in said paragraph mentioned, in a way or manner to render it diseased, contaminated or unwholesome, said person shall be proceeded against," etc. This paragraph and clause in question of paragraph six of Section 3 relate to the same subject matter, and are, of course, to be construed together. It seems to be apparent from the reading of this paragraph that mere proof of unsanitary keeping, handling, etc., of food, is not sufficient, of itself, to sustain a prosecution, but that there must be also proof of disease, contamination or unwholesomeness as a result of such unsanitary keeping, etc.

There may be gross cases of the exposure of foods to flies and other insects, to dust and contamination, which may be successfully prosecuted. There have been some prosecutions successfully maintained in such cases, but these cases have been cases where the food bore evidence of contamination that could be directly traced to such exposure. Where such prosecutions can be successfully sustained by the requisite evidence, they are beneficial, but the institution of prosecutions where the necessary evidence to secure conviction cannot be secured, can do no good, and may do great harm. Certainty of conviction is an indispensable in the enforcement of food laws. Nothing stays the hand of the adulterator of foods so much as the certainty of sure, swift and successful prosecution. Experience shows that if there be a gambler's chance of escaping the penalty for food adulteration, many unscrupulous persons will take that chance, for the profits of food adulteration are large. When a prosecution instituted by your authority fails in Court, encouragement to disregard and defy the law is given to every unscrupulous manufacturer and dealer.

I cannot, therefore, advise, no matter what the exigency may seem to be, any attempt on your part to assume powers not clearly vested in you by law, or any attempt to enlarge the scope of the law under which you are acting beyond the meaning thereof as indicated by the legislative language. For the reasons herein stated and because of the construction herein indicated of the Clause of paragraph six of Section 3 to which reference has been made, forced upon me by the plain language of said Clause, I must advise you that, in my opinion, you cannot sustain cases under said clause upon proof of unsanitary surroundings relative to the keeping, transporting, storing and handling of foods; but that in addition thereto you must prove that by reason of said conditions the food in question has become diseased, contaminated or unwholesome.

The third question which you submit to me for an answer is as to your power, by a rule or regulation adopted and promulgated, to compel the wrapping of bread so as to prevent possible contamination in the handling thereof.

The eighth section of the Act of 1909 authorizes the Dairy and Food Commissioner of the State, "to make rules and regulations for the proper enforcement" of the Act. The question, therefore, submitted to me, is the question of your power as an executive officer to make such rules and regulations, and the character of rules and regulations which you have the power to make.

It must be conceded, I think, that as Dairy and Food Commissioner you have no power to make laws. The Legislature of the State is the only law making power under the Constitution for the State. (See Section 1, Article II of the Constitution of Pennsylvania). The Legislature is not alone the only law making power, but it has no power to delegate the legislative authority vested in it by the Constitution. Therefore the Legislature has no power to grant you authority to make any law. Every law passed by the Legislature must be complete in itself, so that the people are advised by the text of the law as to what the law is.

As an executive officer, you cannot, by a rule or regulation extend the law beyond its letter so as to make it include anything not covered by a proper construction of the law. Neither can you restrict the operation of the law by such rules or regulations. As the law is written and enacted by the Legislature so it must remain. The Legislature apparently recognized the limitations of your power to make rules for, in the section authorizing you to make rules and regulations under the Act of 1909, it expressly limited such rules and regulations to the "enforcement of the Act." Enforcement of the law is an executive function which could be, and was, properly devolved upon you as an executive officer of the Commonwealth. The power given to you to make rules and regulations is clearly, therefore, not a power to make the law. That is the function of the Legislature alone, subject, of course, to the veto power of the Governor.

Again, it will be noted that under this law no person may be prosecuted and convicted for a violation of any rule or regulation adopted and promulgated by the Dairy and Food Commissioner, unless, indeed, such violation be also a violation of the law itself, and in such case the conviction is because the law is violated and not because the rule or regulation is violated. The only penal section of this Act is Section 7. This Section provides for the punishment of any person, "who shall violate any of the provisions of this Act." There is nowhere in the Act any punishment prescribed or provided for violation of the rules and regulations of the Dairy and Food Commissioner. If you cannot, therefore, under the law, punish a person who delivers bread without the wrapping of the same when you have no rule or regulation on said subject, the making of such rule or regulation will not aid you one particle in securing the punishment of such person.

What then is the province of rules and regulations such as are provided for in this statute? Such rules and regulations are clearly intended to be executive in character, but every executive must, of necessity, determine in advance of the decision of a court on the question, whether or not certain acts constitute a violation of the law which it is his duty to enforce. He must use his discretion and judgment in determining when he has a case for prosecution and when he has not, when the law applies and when it does not. He may, therefore, in a general way, for the information of his subordinates and of the public, make and promulgate rules and regulations for the guidance of his executive force, and as notice to the public of his intended action under given circumstances or conditions. He may give his interpretation of the meaning of a statute. Such interpretation, of course, is not binding upon the courts, and it may be necessary, from time to time, to change the rule or regulation so as to make it conform to the decisions of the courts as to the subject matter. But this interpretation is important because it advises the executive force under him and thereby secures uniformity of construction and uniformity of action by his subordinates. It is also important because it advises the public interested of the attitude of such executive officer as to the provisions of the law.

The power to make rules and regulations of the character indicated is necessarily inherent in every executive officer. The power expressly given in this statute is but declaratory of a power existing of necessity in the executive officer charged with the enforcement thereof. Rules and regulations of the character indicated are but the declaration of the opinion and conclusions of the executive officer concerning the subject matters severally embraced in such rules and regulations. They are binding upon the officers and agents who are employed by such executive officer in the enforcement of said law. Such rules and regulations lead to consistency and secure uniformity of action by all the separate agencies subordinate to the said executive officer engaged in the work of enforcing the law.

Such then, is the scope, and such the value of the rules and regulations discussed. Such rules and regulations are not law, are no part of the law, are not binding upon the courts, cannot be made the basis of indictment and have value only for the purposes indicated.

As we have already seen, the successful prosecution of bakers for delivering unwrapped bread, is not generally possible, because of difficulty of proof of such facts as would show a violation of law. Why then, should the Dairy and Food Commissioner make and promulgate a rule requiring the wrapping of bread? As we have seen, such a rule cannot be enforced, neither will its adoption and promulgation correct the evil complained of.

In conclusion, let me say that there can be no doubt of the desire of the Commissioner and of every one connected with his administration of the food laws, to do everything possible to secure to the people pure, unadulterated and uncontaminated food, and for that purpose, to assume every vestige of power that can be found in any law. It is to be regretted that the power of the Food Commissioner does not extend to the correction of the evils which are the subject of complaint. We are consoled, however, with the thought that food legislation is progressing, and that the Legislature may speedily give its attention to a subject that has been heretofore, to a large extent, neglected, to-wit,—necessary sanitation surrounding the production, keeping, handling, preparing and serving of the food of the people.

Respectfully submitted,

A. H. WOODWARD.

This Department concurs in the foregoing opinion.

WM. M. HARGEST,
Second Deputy Attorney General.

FROM HEALTH OFFICER WRIGHT.

The City of Erie,
Erie, Pa., February 11, 1914.

Hon. James Foust, Harrisburg, Pa.:

My Dear Mr. Foust:—I have the honor to enclose herewith copy of decisions of the Court of Common Pleas of this county, Judge

P. A. Benson presiding, relative to the right of the Board of Health of this city to adopt and enforce a regulation governing the wrapping of food products. The decision being in favor of the city.

Yours very truly,

J. W. WRIGHT,
Health Officer.

OPINION BY JUDGE BENSON.

Erie Baking Company,
Plaintiff,

vs.

City of Erie,
M. Liebel, Jr., Mayor of said city, Dr. D. V. Reinoehl, Dr. W. R. Hunter, Dr. G. A. Reed, W. C. Illig and Louis C. Mehler, individually and as members of and constituting the Board of Health of the City of Erie.
Defendants.

No. 54 September Term, 1911.
In the Court of Common Pleas of Erie County, Pennsylvania.

IN EQUITY.

This is a bill in equity wherein the plaintiff, Erie Baking Company, a corporation duly incorporated under the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and having its principal office in the City of Erie, Pa., prays for an injunction.

To enjoin and restrain the defendants from entering or prosecuting or causing to be entered or prosecuted, any suit or action upon a certain regulation enacted by the defendants constituting the Board of Health of the City of Erie for the recovery of the penalties therein mentioned or for any other penalties or for any other purpose or purposes. From the bill, answer and testimony, we find the following facts, to-wit:—

First:—The city of Erie, the defendant, is a municipal corporation of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania of the third class and is situated within the county of Erie.

Second:—The defendant, M. Liebel, Jr., was on the 12th day of May, 1911, the duly elected and qualified mayor of the said city of Erie.

Third:—That the defendants, Dr. D. V. Reinoehl, Dr. W. R. Hunter, Dr. G. A. Reed, W. C. Illig and Louis C. Mehler, were duly appointed and qualified as members of the Board of Health of the said city and at the time of the institution of this suit constituted the duly organized Board of Health of the said city.

Fourth:—On the 12th day of May, 1911, the said Board of Health adopted as an amendment to the rules and regulations of the said Board of Health the following, to-wit: "No bake shop product shall be sold or offered for sale in the city of Erie, unless the same shall be closely wrapped in a clean paper covering, said paper covering to be impervious to any polution whatsoever from dust, flies or any vermin, nor from the hands of any person or persons engaged in its sale, said wrapping to be done at the shop or plant where said product is made. The use of newspapers, or any other waste paper for such wrapping is strictly prohibited."

Any person or persons who shall violate any section or part thereof of the rules and regulations of the Board of Health shall upon conviction thereof, before a duly authorized magistrate be sentenced to pay a fine of not less than five ($5.00) dollars nor more than one hundred ($100) dollars and in default of the payment thereof, with costs, shall undergo imprisonment in the county jail for a period not to exceed thirty (30) days.

Fifth:—The said amendment was duly adopted by the Board of Health on the said 12th day of May, 1911, and signed by its President, D. V. Reinoehl, and attested by its Secretary Clare E. Welsh, and was approved by the Mayor, M. Liebel, Jr., on the 19th day of May, 1911.

Sixth:—That the said Board of Health served or caused to be served upon the plaintiff, a notice containing a copy of said amendment and notified it that the said regulation would be put into effect on and after September 1, 1911.

Seventh:—That prior to the passing of the amendment to the rules and regulations of the Board of Health it was the custom and still is among many of the bakers and those handling bakeshop products, to deliver their goods in open wagons drawn by horses through the streets of Erie, thus exposing the bakeshop products to contamination from dust, flies and other unsanitary conditions.

Eighth:—That bakeshop products are used as an article of food without further preparation by washing or cleaning by the consumer.

Ninth:—That the drivers of the wagons are careless about their personal cleanliness while handling bakeshop products and are accustomed to handling bread and other bakeshop products with their hands immediately after harnessing and otherwise caring for their horses, and in this way renders the products unclean and unsanitary for use as food.

Tenth:—That the bakeshop products are further subject to handling by the drivers in transferring them from the wagons to open baskets in which they are delivered in an unwrapped condition to the retail merchant.

Eleventh:—That bread and other bakeshop products handled in this way are apt to become contaminated or impregnated with disease germs of various species and thus become the direct cause of spreading contagion and disease, prominent among which said diseases as enumerated by the witnesses are the following: pneumonia, diphtheria, scarlet fever and intestinal diseases of various kinds, and in some cases, of typhoid fever and tuberculosis.

Twelfth:—That the normal condition of bakeshop products delivered as they are, soon after baking, are peculiarly adapted to attract and become contaminated with bacteria capable of transmitting diseases.

Thirteenth:—That practically all bakeshop products are used for food when fresh and within four to fourteen hours after baking and when so used, the wrapping of the same at the plant or shop where such product is made could not have, under any of the evidence in this case, a deleterious or harmful effect upon the product.

Fourteenth:—That in most instances the evidence and tests made by experts on food products tend to show that the wrapping of the bread tends rather to improve than to destroy its quality within a period in which unwrapped bread is usually used for food or within the period in which such food stuffs are ordinarily salable.

Fifteenth:—That the plaintiff in this case is now wrapping at its plant about 50 per cent. of its products before delivering the same to their customers.

Sixteenth:—That bread and other bakeshop products are customarily wrapped in some container by the retailer before being delivered to the consumer and the regulation in question only requires that this wrapping which is ordinarily done by the retailer, be done by the wholesaler at the bakeshop.

Seventeenth:—That the cost of wrapping bread ranges from twenty-five cents to thirty cents per hundred loaves.

Eighteenth:—That the tests shown in the evidence disclosed the fact that the wrapping of bread of any description when wrapped in a proper paper or container, does not show from the fact of the wrapping, any deleterious effect within the period when such bread is usually sold and consumed.

Nineteenth:—That the wrapping of ordinary bread seems to keep the bread in a better condition and the tests show that some kinds of bread when properly wrapped are kept in a fresh or salable condition for four or five days when the unwrapped bread becomes dry and unsalable within a much shorter period of time.

For further Findings of Fact see Answer to Requests for Findings of Facts for the plaintiff and defendant.

First:—The Board of Health of the city of Erie did not exceed the scope of its authority delegated to it by the Legislature in adopting as an amendment to the Manual of the Board of Health by the addition of Section 3 of Paragraph 85 under the heading "Bake Shops, Bake Wagons, etc.," as shown in Exhibit A of Plaintiff's Bill of Complaint.

Second:—That the regulation contained in Section 3 as fully set forth in plaintiff's Exhibit A does not unwarrantably invade private rights or transcend the powers granted to the Board of Health and is not unreasonable or oppressive and is a legitimate exercise of the police power for the protection of the health of the people and for the prevention of diseases.

Third:—The said regulation does not impose an unreasonable burden upon the baker by requiring that bakeshop products be wrapped at the bakery before delivery and therefore does not offend against the provisions of the Constitution of the State or the United States.

Fourth:—Said regulation is valid and enforceable as a police regulation.

Fifth:—The bill should be dismissed and the injunction be dissolved at the cost of the plaintiff.

And now, February 2, 1914, the Prothonotary is directed to enter a decree ni si in accordance with the above findings of law, to become absolute unless exceptions are filed sec reg.

THE CARE OF THE EGG ON THE FARM.

Every year there is a loss of millions of dollars in bad eggs, the direct result of haphazard methods of production, marketing, and shipping which are now in vogue in many states. The greatest part of this loss is due mainly to ignorance or indifference on the part of the farmer and producer, and only a small part is caused by carelessness on the part of the buyer and shipper.

With a view to determining the causes of the great loss in eggs, the United States Department of Agriculture undertook a thorough investigation of the problem, and in its latest publication on the subject (Bulletin 160, Bureau of Animal Industry) are presented the results of experiments conducted in Kansas to determine what deterioration took place in eggs when retained under typical conditions on the farms, in the country store, and during transportation.

The field chosen for the work was one where the production and marketing of eggs was an important factor, a location where the cooperation of several farmers could be secured, and a town that was far enough from a central collecting point so that the effect of typical transportation conditions could be observed. The eggs were collected at a stated time each day from several farms, and every egg, fertile or infertile, was supposed to be absolutely fresh when entered in the experiments.

The different tests included keeping eggs in dwelling house, in cyclone cave, in nests provided for laying hens, eggs placed under sitting hen, under corncrib, in nest in weeds or underbrush, in nest in strawstack, and in stolen nests for periods varying from two to seven days.

The tests emphasized the fact that infertile eggs keep better than fertile. One-third of the annual loss in eggs is due to "blood rings." A blood ring is caused by the development and subsequent death of the embryo of a fertile egg subjected to heat. No embryo can develop in an infertile egg, no matter how long it may be subjected to heat. Unless cooled at once and kept cool, a fertile egg will spoil in hot weather almost as quickly as raw milk.

Some of the loss due to "rots" and "spots" is caused by contamination in the nest and is largely, if not entirely, preventable.

Among the results of the tests it was found that:

Eggs kept in the cyclone cave proved much better in quality than those kept under other conditions;

Taking the season as a whole, an unheated room in a dwelling is not conducive to good quality in eggs;

During the hot summer months the conditions surrounding the weed nest, the nest in the straw stack, or under the corn crib, and the stolen nest, as well as the keeping of eggs in the house, favor the production of spots, blood rings, and rots;

Infertile eggs, regardless of where they may be kept, are much more resistant to deterioration than fertile;

Two-thirds of the total loss in fertile and infertile eggs takes place on the farm. The basic factors responsible for this condition are the haphazard methods of poultry management on the farm.

The results of all the experimental work point to the fact that the production of the infertile egg is the greatest asset in the attempt to produce high-quality market eggs during hot weather.

To assure a high quality of product and prevent in a large measure the loss now experienced in the value of the country's egg production, producers are urged to observe the following five simple rules:

(1) Give the hens clean nests.
(2) Gather eggs at least once daily.
(3) Keep eggs in a cool, dry place.
(4) Market eggs at least twice a week.
(5) Kill or sell all mature male birds as soon as the hatching season closes.

OUR $200,000,000 WASTE IN EGGS.

Washington, D. C., July 15.—The annual American egg crop is estimated to be worth $500,000,000, but according to the egg specialists of the Department of Agriculture the value of our eggs should be $700,000,000. Between the hen and the consumer, there is a waste of $200,000,000 annually. Of this waste, $50,000,000 is due to the needless breakage of eggs in transit from the nest to the retailer. The balance, $150,000,000 represents unnecessary addling, spoiling and deterioration of good eggs due to bad handling. The egg as the hen lays it is almost invariably a good egg. But one out of every ten eggs which she lays for market are broken in shipment. Three out of the remaining nine good eggs are so badly handled that they are either stale or of a much lower market grade by the time they are opened by the housewife or dropped into the boiling water. In other words not more than six out of every ten eggs laid by the little gray hen reach the consumer in anything like the shape that nature intended when she provided this form of food for humans. This means that about 40 per cent. of our eggs are fit only for unusually strong palates or for use in tanning leather or else go to add to the crematory bills and dump heap bills of our great cities—the unpleasant monuments to needless American waste of good food in the face of lowered food production and increasing population.

Uncle Sam through his Department of Agriculture is tackling this problem of egg food waste in two practical ways. Through the Bureau of Animal Industry he is trying to teach people how to raise more and bigger eggs and also how to raise pullets at such times and feed them in such ways that they will lay in the fall after the hens have stopped laying. But Uncle Sam also feels that it will take an awful lot of egg raising to meet the demand if about four eggs out of every ten get smashed or contribute to the size of his costly garbage heap. He is doing his utmost to see if he cannot get those four extra eggs to the tables of his nieces and nephews with whole shells and insides that will promote rather than kill egg appetites.

To Lessen Breakage of Eggs.

The country gets its eggs from the great central corn belt where the gray hen does not have to scratch so hard for her living. Egg production on the east coast and on the Pacific coast consists principally of eggs raised for individual home use or for the fancy local trade in newly laid eggs. There are not nearly enough left over to supply the cities and towns. The important supply of eggs along our coasts therefore must come by rail considerable distances from the central corn belt. In the past, every mile the egg had to travel meant broken eggs and the arrival of "scrambles" in New York. Before eggs were shipped in refrigerator cars every mile traveled through the summer heat meant good eggs deteriorating, growing more and more stale and nearer the explosive stage—30 per cent. of each car lot lowered in value, and 6 per cent. or more consigned to the dumping barges of the coast cities.

The latest experiment undertaken with the egg crates has been to place delicate instruments which record shocks in such crates and ship them across the country. At the end of the journey, the instrument shows exactly the force of the blows that the case has undergone and consequently the amount of shock from which the eggs have to be protected. As fast as experience proves any device to be practical, the Department's discoveries are made common knowledge throughout the egg-handling trade. Meanwhile, the Department is sending its Egg and Poultry Demonstration Car through the corn belt and showing egg shippers all the little improvements in egg grading, candling and packing that the experiments have revealed.

Trying to Save $150,000,000 A Year in Spoilage and Deterioration of Eggs.

If the hens laid eggs regularly all the year round and the supply were constant, the saving of eggs from the tanneries and the dumps would not be so complicated. It would largely be a matter of teaching the farmers to gather the eggs from the nests before a long hot day has had time to start them by increase in temperature on the downward road through blood rings, spots, floaters, white rots, black rots and other downright rots as the egg's history from goodness to explosive perversity is written by the egg men. For eggs, even more than humans, have to keep cool to be good eggs. The human can get hot under the collar and then cool down and be all right—not so the egg, one little spell of heat and it never again regains its pristine sweetness. Then the farmers would have to be taught, after the eggs are gathered, to keep them in a cool place and to keep them cool and covered by the big umbrella on the wagon on his trip to town. Of course, he would have to learn to bring them in promptly because the egg does not employ any sort of life even country life—to improve itself.

After that the egg-shipping man in the little railroad town would have to learn to chill those eggs at once—chill them thoroughly, pack them in proper cases and put them in a refrigerator car and see that they never got above 50° F. until delivered at the end of a 500 to 2,000 mile journey. Then if there were not too many delays and the wholesale commission man kept the eggs cold, and Mrs. Housekeeper kept these widely traveled eggs in her refrigerator until she broke them into the pudding or got them ready for a ride on toast to the breakfast table, father would not sniff and say: "I don't seem to care for eggs as much as I used to."

But the perverse little gray hen will not act like a clock—you can wind her up on any sort of food that you like but when fall comes she will moult and go off the egg-laying job until warm weather. True her young daughters—if hatched in the right months of the spring and properly fed, may not moult and may lay in the fall just to show mother hen what a new generation can do. But anyway you fix it—there will be a lot more eggs laid in summer than people can use in summer and there will be a lot fewer eggs laid in winter than are needed by Uncle Sam's egg-hungry famliy. Consequently a large part of that 30 per cent. waste results in summer when eggs are plentiful and so cheap that most folks don't bother much about them. True, the housewives do bother—that is some of them; they remember when eggs are plentiful how a single egg cost a whole nickel around Thanksgiving time and you couldn't always be sure it was a good egg at that. So here and there women have long been experimenting with ways of keeping good eggs over—some covered them with water glass or lime or parafine or did various other things with them to make them keep. Some had pretty fair success if they worked with really fresh eggs that never had a chance to get hot nor cracked, but none of these plans were successful in keeping over the millions of dozens of eggs needed each winter month by the big cities.

So Uncle Sam, who is an unusual sort of bachelor, decided he would look into the matter of keeping those eggs not needed in summer fresh until Mrs. Hen stopped laying. He soon came to the conconclusion that the answer lay in cold and cleanliness. He found that when he had taught farmer and country merchant and refrigerator car operator to get the eggs fresh and keep them cold the refrigerator men in the big centers could then store these cold eggs and keep them edible for 10 months. But, as he was careful to point out, an egg intended for the table ten months hence must be kept so cold all the way, that it would never start to be a bad little egg. Once it had started to be bad, cold would not make it good again. Cold would merely keep it quiet watching for a chance to get a little warm to be as bad as possible. At first Uncle Sam's nieces didn't like the idea of stored eggs but gradually the lesson of cold stored beef and mutton has made them accustomed to eating things that are a long way and a long time from the pasture or chicken yard. For life in great crowded cities necessarily is far removed from digging your own vegetables and personal friendship with the cow that gives one milk or the hens that provide one's beautiful pink egg for breakfast. Getting one's milk via a dumb waiter and in a bottle after all is scarcely less artificial than eating an egg laid 1,000 miles from one's apartment. For these reasons, Uncle Sam and his trained specialists are studying every phase of the egg—getting at the exact conditions that make good eggs bad and finding out how much cold will keep a good egg good long enough to give the gray hen her winter vacation and yet not force most of us to do without eggs at breakfast or to eat our cakes and puddings with fewer eggs than our grandmothers say are needed in these confections.

CANDLING AND GRADING OF EGGS.

By W. Scott Matthews, State Food Commissioner of Illinois.

The average purchaser of eggs is generally very often in doubt as to the freshness of the supply offered him. He realizes that in each dozen of eggs purchased he may get a certain number of bad ones and therefore estimates their value accordingly. This uncertainty as to the wholesomeness of the egg supply has worked to the detriment of the industry and is the principal reason why the farmer is unable, at times, to get a satisfactory price for his eggs. Should the purchaser be sure of getting twelve sound eggs in each dozen purchased, the price which the farmer would receive for them would be advanced, and the production of eggs on the farm would become a paying proposition.

I believe that the quality of eggs sold in this State can be greatly improved without placing any unnecessary burden upon the producer.

Many bad eggs reach the market as the result of unintelligent and careless gathering and handling. This condition the Illinois State Food Commissioner wishes to correct by recommending proper methods.

There are men who knowingly, or through indifference, defraud the purchaser by selling bad eggs. With such people this department has no patience, but will call their attention to the following sections of the Illinois Food and Dairy Law which read:

> "Section 8. An article shall be deemed to be adulterated (6) if it consists in whole or in part of a filthy, decomposed or putrid, infected, tainted or rotten animal or vegetable substance."

"Section 41. Penalty. Any person convicted of violating * * * * shall, for the first offense be punished by a fine in any sum not less than fifteen (15) dollars, and not more than one hundred (100) dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding thirty days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court, and for the second and each subsequent offense by a fine of not less than twenty-five (25) dollars and not more than two hundred (200) dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court * * * *"

The sale of ROTTEN or SPOT EGGS is therefore prohibited. The FARMER, COUNTRY MERCHANT, WHOLESALE DEALER or RETAILER offering such eggs for sale or having them in his possession with intent to sell, violates this section of the law. Each is subject to the same penalty.

The Food Commission wishes to make the following recommendations for the betterment of the egg supply:

To the Farmer.

Produce only infertile eggs for market as they do not spoil so quickly as fertile ones.

Dispose of the roosters as soon as eggs for hatching are obtained. The eggs keep better and the hens will lay just as many of them.

Provide plenty of clean nests with clean straw in them.

Gather eggs twice daily in hot weather and store them in a cool, sweet, well-ventilated place but do not store where damp.

Do not wash eggs.

Market eggs as often as possible and carry them gently.

Do not sell eggs from stolen nests. Use them at home.

Protect eggs from the sun when taking them to market. Eggs exposed to hot sunshine for one hour will spoil; this applies to infertile as well as fertile eggs.

CANDLE your eggs and insist upon having them CANDLED by the purchaser so that he may know that he is buying good eggs and pay accordingly. You will thus reap the advantage for the care you have given them. Send a postal card to the Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., and ask for a copy of Year Book Separate No. 552, which explains the operation of candling and grading of eggs.

To Egg Buyers.

CANDLE all eggs and buy only on "Loss off" basis.

Return all bad eggs to the farmer. Encourage him to produce good, clean eggs by paying less for the other kind.

Store eggs in a cool, sweet and dry place.

Use only clean, dry fillers for packing.

Forward eggs to commission men as often as possible.

Do not deliver to railway until shortly before train time.

Keep eggs out of the sun.

To Packers and Car Lot Shippers.

Do not buy "Case Count." Have a standard for quality and refuse all eggs not up to the standard.

Do not deal in "Spots" and "Rots."

Arrange separate refrigerated rooms for storing eggs.

Do not allow eggs to remain in a hot car any longer than is necessary.

To Retailers.

Buy only properly graded eggs. Do not misrepresent them to purchaser. Buy in small quantities unless you have separate refrigerator for storing them. Keep them away from all odorous substances,, particularly kerosene oil, fish, decaying vegetables, etc.

To the Housewife.

Buy only CANDLED and properly graded eggs.

Keep eggs in a cool, sweet and well-ventilated place.

Wash eggs before using them as the shell may not be as clean as it appears.

If you receive bad eggs from your dealer, report the facts to this department.

Illinois is the second largest egg-producing state in the country. We produced last year eggs to the value of $45,000,000 but with a loss of about $5,500,000 due to improper care and handling.

I believe that by carrying out the instructions here given, that much of this loss will be prevented and that Illinois will soon have a reputation for good eggs.

ILLUMINATING THE SITUATION.

Question. What is the color of the natural ingredients from which oleomargarine is made?

Answer. A very light shade of yellow.

Question. What is the natural color of butter made from cows on natural grass pasture?

Answer. A rather high shade of yellow.

Question. Why do dairymen sometimes color winter butter, that is lighter than normal color?

Answer. To preserve a uniform product, and that it may look like exactly what it is—butter.

Question. Why do oleomargarine manufacturers want to color their product yellow?

Answer. To deceive the buyer, or consumer by making their product look like, exactly what it is not—butter.

Question. Why are the manufacturers, and dealers in oleomargarine so anxious to counterfeit butter?

Answer. That they may sell it at, or near the price of butter.

Question. Are there excessive profits in selling oleomargarine at, or near the price of butter?

Answer. Yes. For the reason that the cost of producing butter is more than double that of producing oleomargarine.

Question. Is it just and right, that the person who wishes to consume butter should be protected against the injustice and fraud attendant upon the substitution of a low priced product?

Answer. Yes. Most of our food laws are based upon this well established principle of justice.

Question. How does the coloring of oleomargarine yellow encourage and abet fraud?

Answer. By so counterfeiting butter as to make it impossible for the ordinary consumer to identify it.

Question. Why it is necessary for butter and oleomargarine to appear different to the eye, that fraud and deception may be prevented?

Answer. The light colored, nearly tasteless and oderless fats and oils from which oleomargairine is made, are churned in milk to give them the flavor and aroma of butter. If they are then colored to look like butter the consumer has no way of distinguishing this counterfeit product from genuine butter.

Question. Would a law forcing oleomargarine to be sold in small quantities and put up in fibre, or metal containers plainly stamped and branded protect the consumer against fraudulent substitution?

Answer. No. Millions of our people take one or more meals a day at boarding houses, restaurants, and hotels. They ask for butter, and are willing to pay for butter; but if oleomargarine is permitted to counterfeit butter they would largely get oleo.

Question. If oleo manufacturers believe their own statements, to-wit, that oleo is superior to butter in purity and wholesomeness; why are they striving for the privilege of counterfeiting butter?

Ans. ?.

Question. Do the dairy interests object to competing with oleomargarine?

Answer. They court competition, but object to substitution. Where there is substitution there can not be competition.

Question. Why is it of vital interest to agriculture and to the country at large, that the butter product of the cow be protected from counterfeiting and fraudulent substitution?

Answer. Until beef largely increases in value, cows cannot be profitably kept on improved farms for the production of beef alone. Counterfeiting, and thereby substitution of low priced intestinal fats and vegetable oils for genuine butter means the passing of the cow from many American farms. With her passes the mother of the beef steer, and the farmer's mainstay in his effort to maintain the fertility of his farm. The results will be higher prices for beef, lower acre production of grains, and ultimately higher priced butter substitutes.

Question. What do the farmers ask of Congress?

Answer. That butter substitutes be made to stand upon their own bottom; to sell upon their own merit; to cease counterfeiting butter; and to appear in their own inherit and distinctive color. Only in this way can the admitted rights of the producers of butter, and the persons who elect to consume butter be protected.

Secretary National Dairy Union.

BLEACHED FLOUR AND THE LAW.

Harrisburg, Pa.

Pennsylvania's law in regard to the sale of "bleached flours" has been made plain by Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust. In a statement he set forth that since the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in the bleached flour case, which ruled against the interpretation given to the law by the United States Department of Agriculture, numerous inquiries have been received from millers, flour dealers and consumers concerning the effect of that decision upon the Pennsylvania trade.

The Commissioner said that the addition to food of nitrous acid or nitrites, which are introduced in the more generally practiced method of bleaching, is specifically prohibited by the Pennsylvania Food Law, so that the United States Supreme Court decision does not change the legal status of bleached flour in this State. The Commissioner added that, in view of the conditions elsewhere resulting from the Federal Court's decision he had directed Special Agent

H. L. Banzhoff to purchase in the usual way, samples of all flours on sale in the State that were brought in from other states, from Ohio westward, and also to examine into the milling practice of all Pennsylvania flouring mills and to buy samples of their flours wherever there was reason to believe that they were using a bleacher. In this way 104 samples of foreign flours were purchased, together with a number of domestic samples. These were examined by Chemist James A. Evans, of Erie, who found 28 samples contained nitrous acid or nitrites. Prosecutions for violation of the law have already been started in these cases and will be vigorously pushed.

Practically all the brands affected were milled in Kansas, Michigan, Ohio, New York and Pennsylvania. The millers of these States are warned that bleached flour, if shipped to Pennsylvania, will be condemned as rapidly as they can be found.

DAIRY AND FOOD OFFICIALS.

RUNNING SKETCH OF THE ANNUAL MEETING HELD AT PORTLAND, ME., IN JULY.

Some of the Papers Read During the Sessions by Distinguished Representatives of the Dairy and Food Interests of the United States.

The annual convention of the Association of American Dairy and Food and Drug Officials met in Portland, Me., Monday, July 13th. Nearly all the states of the Union were represented. The United States Department of Agriculture was also represented at the gathering by distinguished officials.

The opening session was held in the common council chamber. Mayor Curtis, of Portland, spoke the welcome from both State and City as Governor Haines was unable to be present to speak in person for the State. Frank M. Low spoke for the Portland Board of Trade, through whose efforts the convention met in Portland.

Hon. S. V. Strode, of Ohio, gave the response to the address of welcome, speaking briefly and explaining the plans and purposes of the association. He insisted that his judgment of the importance of the meeting was correct, because the association is composed of officials who are engaged in a most important work—that of protecting food stuffs and thereby protecting the public health. He claimed that food control, besides affecting health, affects something still more important, the morals of the community, because it removes the temptation to adulterate foodstuffs and give unfair deals by making it harder to do wrong than it is to do right. He declared that unrestricted competition without food regulation had driven dealers to such methods that twenty-five years ago adulteration, short weight and such practices were considered normal practices. Now, he said, the efforts of such men as these had changed this.

At the afternoon session President James H. Wallis, State Commissioner for Idaho, delivered his annual address. He said that for years it had been apparent to every experienced worker that efficiency in the work of protecting the health and the pocketbooks of the people could not be expected until uniform standards were adopted. Accordingly a representative committee of nine competent men to form food standards was organized, with three members from the Bureau of Chemistry, three from the official Agricultural Chemists and three from the Association of American Dairy, Food and Drug officials, and that those present had pledged themselves to accept these standards and enforce them.

Continuing, he said that not all violations of the food laws are attacks upon health, but many of them are assaults upon the pocketbook and efforts have been made in several States to stamp out these frauds. A manufacturer who conceives it necessary to his success to hoodwink the public in regard to the quality or quantity of his product is no better than he who pilfers from the public in other ways. He said the movement to secure a commission to study sanitary food production and methods of food inspection and law enforcement in foreign countries was a step in the direction of securing broader information regarding the work of the Association.

Dr. S. J. Crumbine reported for the committee on co-operation and the report was accepted and ordered printed in the official journal. The committee on bacteriological standards reported progress, remarking that this is a very important subject and one on which no mistakes should be made. Hence the wisdom of making haste slowly. The joint committee on food standards asked for further time also, which was granted.

On Tuesday morning, Dr. Carl L. Alsberg, chief of the Bureau of Chemistry of the Federal Department of Agriculture, addressed the convention on "General Standards." He pleaded vigorously for a general standard of all foods, but admitted that that was an ideal the fulfillment of which was still some distance in the future. He declared that general standards would simplify law, cheapen the cost of its enforcement and protect both the consumer and the manufacturer.

In the discussion that followed Dr. William Frear, of Pennsylvania, took part.

Hon. R. M. Allen, of Kentucky, read a carefully prepared paper on "Most Efficient Methods of Meat Inspection." Co-operative butchering by communities was strongly urged. The theme proved an interesting one and was discussed by several other gentlemen, most of whom had some excellent suggestions to offer.

Dr. G. G. Frary, of South Dakota, presented an ideal plan for the inpsection and management of hotel and restaurant kitchens, with reference to safeguarding health.

Beginning with the afternoon session the printed program was unmercifully slaughtered. It was determined that the convention should end its labors on Friday and the program for Saturday was incorporated in the proceedings of the other days. Henceforth the sections of the organization divided, each holding its own session and discussing its own program.

At the meeting of the Chemists, President Chittick, of Iowa, read his annual address and several other interesting papers were read. The paper by A. R. Todd, of Michigan, on "State Drug Inspection," provoked much discussion. In fact all the papers were discussed at length.

The meeting for state dairy and food executives was presided over by Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust, of Pennsylvania, who delivered his annual address. It follows:

ANNUAL ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT.

STATE FOOD AND DAIRY EXECUTIVES.

Section A. Association of American Dairy, Food and Drug Officials Portland, Me., Tuesday, July 14, 1914, 2:00 P. M.

By JAMES FOUST, Dairy and Food Commissioner, Pennsylvania.

Gentlemen of the Association of State Food and Dairy Executives:

In a few sentences I shall perform my assigned duty and privilege of formally opening this Fifth Annual Session of the Association of State Food and Dairy Executives, its second meeting as Section "A" of the Association of American Dairy, Food and Drug Officials under the constitution revised at the Seattle meeting in 1912. To those familiar with the variety and difficulties of the food executives' problems, the values of conference such as this will need no explanation. For though we serve different constituencies, each with its own body of laws and judicial decisions, and its own local problems, the general character of our laws are similar, the related decisions show a like range of interpretation, the abuses to be corrected are the same, and the producing and selling interests affected are either connected with organizations of National extent, or guided in many ways by examples set in States other than their own. In the long run, therefore, our problems are much alike, and the more distinctively executive methods and practices of one State affect the control operations of other States.

It follows that the experiences of each executive contain much that would be of value to all, if properly made known. The executive action may find expression in rulings and in published reports, but the consideration of facts, conditions and opinions underlying the action rarely find such expression; yet these details are of greatest importance to others having to decide the same main question.

This leads me to the point I wish chiefly to urge. The value of our sessions depends upon a proper selection of subjects—such as are of general and immediate interest—and upon their full discussion by all. I trust that the topics listed for consideration at this meeting will interest every one of us. Some of them involve matters that are always subjects of question, either to ourselves or to our administrative superiors and our legislative and public critics; and hence our acquaintances with the changes in practice in other States and the reasons therefore must be kept up to date; others grow out of new judicial decisions gravely affecting the tendencies of interpretation of many State laws. Discuss them each of you, as his experience may permit, but in words few and to the point—a bullet in the bull's eye. No other method will give us what we are seeking from these meetings. Let our motto be, "Give and Take"—give freely of our best, and take away with us the best that others have given.

After the reports of the secretary and treasurer had been disposed of Hon. George L. Flanders, of New York, read a paper on "The Value of Specialized Counsel in Food Law Prosecutions." He strongly favored the employment of special counsel.

The next paper dealt with "Publication vs. Prosecution as a Means of Abating Food Trade Evils." Its author was Hon. E. F. Ladd, of North Dakota. He plead for the use of moral suasion, public education and, if necessary, a generous showing up in the newspapers of how things are before undertaking to invoke the strong arm of the law.

Hon. H. E. Barnard, of Indiana, conducted a Round Table on "The Supreme Court Decision in the Bleached Flour Case," and after that Dr. Caspari, of Maryland, took charge of an animated Question Box department.

At the session's close the following officers were elected:

President—Hon. James Foust of Pennsylvania.

Vice President—Hon. J. A. Roberts of Maine.

Secretary—W. B. Barney of Iowa.

Treasurer—Frank A. Jackson of Rhode Island.

Executive committee—Officers and E. F. Ladd of North Dakota and Guy G. Frary of South Dakota.

The convention came to a conclusion on Friday, many papers of value and some very interesting and vital discussions having profitably occupied the time. Several of these papers will be found in another part of this number of the Bulletin. Two of them deal with the same subject, "The Relation Between Food Manufacturers and Food Commissioners." One was by Dr. T. B. Wagner, of the Corn Products Company, the other by Charles F. Simes, president of the National Confectioners' Association.

Concerning these papers the Bulletin feels moved to say that Dr. Wagner's production is a thought-provoking one and was received with marked attention. It presents his side of the case with much decision and clearness. The paper by President Simes is also well worth the space we give it. We are glad to bear testimony to the fact that the National Confectioners' Association has done a great deal to help along the cause of pure food. Nevertheless there is much remaining to be done. It is the duty of the confectionery manufacturers of the country to eliminate the use of resinous glazes on their confectionery. This is not used by all and it is positively prohibited in Pennsylvania. It is nothing else than floor varnish; it has no nourishing qualities; its history is decidedly unsanitary and should have no part or parcel in the manufacture of the candy eaten by the children of the United States.

Among the resolutions was the following dealing with the oleomargarine problem. It was adopted by a unanimous vote:—

WHEREAS, We have been informed that an effort will be made at the next session of congress to secure the passage of an amendment to the law now in force regulating the sale of oleomargarine,

And WHEREAS, The Federal laws now existing for the regulation of the sale of oleomargarine are in our judgment defective, and do not protect the people as they should against the sale of oleomargaraine, as butter, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED, By this association, that in our judgment the following changes in the oleomargarine law are needed:

1. The Federal act distinguishes in its treatment colored from uncolored oleomargarine, but its definition of the colored oleomargarine is so narrow that by the use of improved processes a very large quantity of oleomargarine resembling yellow butter in color escapes classification as colored oleomargarine and is treated as an uncolored product. That is to say, the Federal act does not class oleomargarine as colored unless the coloration be affected by a distinct dye stuff, yet by the use of high colored fats, or of special processes of treatment of fats, a yellow oleomargarine may be produced, and, because of the narrow terms of the act at the point mentioned, be classed and taxed as uncolored oleomargarine. The result of this condition is that the consumer is commonly deceived into the belief that the article is butter and the vender is given opportune grounds for a claim that he has been misled. The act should be amended by so defining colored oleomargarine that it shall include all butter substitutes that shall have been caused to resemble yellow butter, no matter how—whether it be by the addition of butter itself, the use of other fats of yellow color, by the addition of dye stuffs or by such treatment of ingredients as effect the yellow coloration of the product.

2. The provision that an offender must be proven to have "knowingly" violated the law in order to secure conviction should be stricken out.

3. Revenue collectors should not be instructed or permitted to compromise or settle cases growing out of violations of the law. When the offense is apparent and the proof is available, the case should be disposed of by the courts having jurisdiction.

4. The law should require that all stamps, brands, etc., placed upon packages of oleomargarine for their identification shall be so conspicuous and plain as to prevent their concealment.

5. Applicants for revenue license should be required to certify that the location given for their place of business is true and correct, and if oleomargarine is sold by the applicant at any other location than that designated in the revenue license, such sale should be made a misdemeanor.

RESOLVED, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States and to the committees on agriculture of both the houses of congress.

Just before adjourning on Friday the convention elected the following officers.

President—S. J. Crumbine, of Kentucky.
First Vice President—E. F. Ladd, of North Dakota.
Second Vice President—H. C. Smith, of Utah.
Third Vice President—A. M. G. Soule, of Maine.
Secretary—W. M. Allen, of North Carolina.
Treasurer—Frank Jackson, of Rhode Island.
Executive Committee—James H. Wallis, of Idaho; W. B. Barney, of Iowa, Joel G. Winkjer, of Minnesota.

Next year's convention will be held at Berkeley, California.

The Portland meeting was in many respects a fine and instructive assembly. The people of the city and the food officials of the State, made things very pleasant for the visitors who will ever cherish many pleasant recollections of the scenes and incidents attending the convention's sessions.

ADVISABILITY OF SPECIAL OLEOMARGARINE LEGISLATION.

By JAMES FOUST, Pennsylvania.

Following are Commissioner Foust's remarks at the Portland Convention on the above subject:

In discussing this assigned subject, I shall assume that the "Special Legislation" mentioned is legislation of the prevailing type relating to this product—legislation involving licensing, positive labeling, and color limiting features, as contrasted with our general food laws.

With this understanding of the subject, the question takes a new face, for we already have, in practically every State, special legislation of the kind described regulating the manufacture and sale of this butter substitute. So the question really is, should this body of special laws be repealed, and reliance be placed solely upon our general food laws for the prevention of abuses in the oleo trade? To this question thus stated I would say most emphatically "NO."

This answer is not based upon any objection to the sale of oleo as such, but is compelled by the history of the trade in this article ever since it was introduced as a butter substitute—a history full of fraud, of evasion and even defiance of the law.

It is said, on the other side, that the present leaders of this industry recognize the continuing public prejudice has been, in great measure, the result of these evil practices, and that they are now agreed that the butter flag should not be hoisted on the oleo ship, but that it should sail under its own emblem. How far the real captains of this industry are now moved by motives of honesty or of far-sighted policy, and how far by the increasing dangers and penalties of sailing under a false flag, I do not know. But I am certain that the ease of deception and its good financial advantage when successfully carried out, still remain to tempt a host of petty dealers who have an eye only for the present penny and don't have telescopic sight by which to see the more distant dollar.

It is unjust to make the oleo trade bear the penalties of past misdoings until by a reasonable period of strict and faithful obedience to existing laws they give warrant for the belief that they will behave when less carefully watched, less strictly regulated.

As to the several features described in special oleo legislation: I believe in license requirements, because they enable us the better to watch the business. I believe in reasonably high license fees, not so high, on the one hand, as to prevent a reasonable distribution of the product, nor so low as to bring into the business great numbers of irresponsible dealers. The Pennsylvania License Fees are $500 for wholesale, $100 for retail, and $50 for hotel or restaurant licenses. In the main, this schedule of fees seems to be accomplishing the purposes just mentioned, without considerably affecting the retail price the consumer has to pay.

I believe also in prohibiting the sale of oleo that is not made and kept free from coloration causing it to resemble butter of any shade of yellow. If you keep the imitative color out of oleo, you eliminate the fraud and keep the price down to a normal level. If you permit imitative coloring by any method, you increase the fraud and raise the price, almost if not quite, to the butter level.

I believe in requiring that the wholesale and retail packages be stamped "OLEOMARGARINE" in a clear, unconfused manner, and that hotels and restaurants using oleo as a butter substitute be compelled to display placards stating the fact.

The present Pennsylvania oleomargarine law has been in force for thirteen years, and since it has been fully interpreted by the courts and so amended as to standardize the maximum color limit allowed to the article, it has been working well. The people who want butter, get it; and those who wish oleo, get it at a price relatively much lower than in the past; and, despite the color limit, are buying it more generally than ever.

A FOOD LAW WEAKNESS—THE COMMISSIONER.

By JAMES FOUST, Pennsylvania.

On the above named subject Commissioner Foust addressed the Portland convention as follows:

Mr. President and Gentlemen:—There can be no question that the executive charged with the enforcement of food laws and with the duty of advising the Legislature upon new legislation on that subject, needs to have ready at hand a large amount of special knowledge not belonging to the equipment of the average citizen. Neither can it be doubted that the fund of such knowledge, the acquaintance with the leaders in trade and public movements, and the skill in applying such knowledge to the problems of his office, must grow with each year of active experience on the part of the food executive. If he is to start with, a man of intelligence, courage, honesty, breadth of view, industry and tact, he will be a more valuable public servant as his experience grows.

All that, however, is theory. In practice, other facts are taken into account in determining administrational policies, and, in many States, the food executive is considered a member of the administration, and his office is therefore regarded as political. In fact, where so many people and so large financial values are affected as by our food laws, questions of executive policy, as well as of legislation, become almost necessarily subjects of political interest. Under these conditions, an executive without political gumption would be weak, because he would lack the knowledge and skill needed to get the best results possible under the existing conditions, and would be likely to run his ship upon shoals a more skillful navigator would avoid.

But, after all, how far will our judgment upon this subject determine our tenure? What is the use of our talking very much or very loud about the matter? The people rule, and they will decide what they want.

THE RELATION BETWEEN FOOD MANUFACTURERS AND FOOD COMMISSIONERS.

ADDRESS BY T. B. WAGNER, DELIVERED AT THE ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICAN DAIRY, FOOD AND DRUG OFFICIALS, PORTLAND, MAINE, JULY 17TH, 1914.

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Association:—

In responding to the invitation of your President to address this convention, I wish to say first of all, that it is not my intention to hold a brief either for the Food Commissioners or for the Food Manufacturers; they are fully able to take care of themselves. I do want to speak, however, on some features of pure food, and upon the enforcement of so-called Pure Food Laws, which have come under my observation during the last twelve years, and which I beg leave to commend to your earnest consideration, believing that they are well worth being brought to your attention. What I shall say is submitted not in a spirit of criticism, but in the belief that a frank discussion of the manufacturers' side of the pure food question will serve to lay a broad foundation for real constructive work for food commissioners and food manufacturers—that I think is the spirit which governs your "Manufacturer's Day" at these conventions.

Like all other industries, the manufacture of food products has undergone, vast changes, and has increased tremendously in volume, and therefore in its importance among the industries of this country. Due to this advancement new products are being constantly put before the public, and one would expect that their manufacture would meet with unrestrained encouragement. Should not Food Officials be in a receptive mood as to new ideas bearing upon the manufacture of new food products by unreasonable regulations. I do not wish to be understood as finding fault with the laws, for, as a rule they are easily complied with, but what I have in mind is the tendency of discouraging the manufacture of a new food product for no other reason than that it is something different from what grandmother used to make The followers of such a policy do not seem to bear in mind the fact that conditions in grandmother's days were quite different from what they are today. Concentrated population within a restricted area of a large city did not exist in her days, and the question of securing the daily food supplies for an enormous population had not become serious, for grandmother was able to produce on her own property most of the food required by her family. In our large cities, however, people depend primarily upon the manufacturers for their daily supply of food.

If a manufacturer decides to put out a new food product in the development of which he has spent a great deal of time and energy, and has called into service the assistance of the best specialists and experts obtainable, and if he backs up this new product with comprehensive and costly advertising, he may find his efforts checked by severe so-called rules and regulations. For instance, a food official will notify a manufacturer that under his rules and regulations the manufacturer must disclose upon the label the percentage of each ingredient present in his particular product. The Food Law, under which this Food Official is supposed to perform his duties, does not contain any such restriction, yet, if the attention of the Food Official is called to this fact he maintains that the Legislature has given him the power to promulgate rules and regulations governing the sale of food in his State, and that acting under such authority, he has promulgated certain rules and regulations which require the percentage of ingredients to be stated on the label. Obviously the food official overlooks the fact that the Legislature gave him the right to issue rules and regulations only to that extent that those rules should apply solely to existing provisions of the law, and he overlooks the further fact that he is trying, through his rules and regulations, to read something into the law which the Legislature did not put there.

In other words, the Food Official, under the disguise of rules and regulations assumes the functions of the law makers: he frames the laws, he passes them, and finally by affixing his signature he makes them effective—a much less complicated proceedure, indeed, than is usually followed in the legislatures, where a bill has to be passed by two houses, and even after having been passed, still runs a chance of being vetoed by the Governor of the State.

Now, the manufacturer is perfectly willing, even anxious, to comply with the law, but what is he to do, if he is compelled, not to comply with the law, but to comply with what the Food Official thinks ought to be the law? The food manufacturer does not wish to break the law, yet he may not want to do something that the law does not require him to do. Upon consulting the law he finds that it directs specifically that when, in the opinion of the Food Officials, an article of food appears to be misbranded or adulterated, such fact should be forthwith certified to the nearest District or County attorney for prosecution. In spite of these specific directions, does the food official always act in conformity therewith? Rather, does he not instruct his inspectors to see the retailers and tell them that certain articles of food which the retailer has on his shelves are illegal, and must not be sold? And does he not go further and publish in the "Bulletin" of his department his "findings," branding therein publicly this particular article of food as illegal and holding the manufacturer up to public scorn? In other words, the Food Official in such a case acts as the prosecuting attorney, judge and jury. "Illegal" means contrary to law, not in conformity with the law, outlaw; and under our constitution the question as to whether an act is within or without the law, is delegated to the courts to determine. The decision as to whether an act or a thing is legal or illegal is left to a person who is trained in and conversant with the law. I do not believe that anyone will contend that the food official is a person clothed with that authority, and yet we find in ever so many bulletins a steady reference to certain articles of food as illegal. Is it fair, is it right, that a pure and wholesome article of food be classed as illegal and the manufacturer be held up to the public scorn as a law breaker, without having had his day in court? Is this not against our spirit of fair play? If a man undermines the credit of another by circulating false reports about his financial responsibility, such an act is an offence in the eyes of the law, yet is it a greater offense than undermining the standing which a manufacturer of food products enjoys in his community and among his trade? I remember a case a few years ago in one of our Western States, where the food commissioner or his deputies served notice upon a small manufacturer that at a certain hour of a certain day they would enter his place of business, seize certain articles of food and dispose of them, as they claimed "according to law," without the manufacturer having had his day in court. Is this not a flagrant violation of the 14th amendment of our constitution? Needless to say, the property never was destroyed as proposed, because the courts intervened by injunction and not only prevented the destruction of the property, but went further and, upon hearing the merits of the case, gave the property a clean bill of health.

Let us now consider the effect of "conviction by bulletin." The retailer receives the bulletin in his regular mail, and reads carefully all that is said about different articles of food. He may run across a paragraph stating that a certain product, in which he has dealt for many years with profit to himself, which he has used extensively in his own family, and which he has come to look upon as one of the purest and most wholesome articles of food is "illegal." He assumes, of course, this to be the decision of the court, and not merely a layman's opinion. What effect has this bulletin notice upon him? You know the answer, for he starts out immediately to rid his store or warehouse of his stock, with the firm resolve never to handle this product again, and he proceeds to notify the jobber or manufacturer to that effect in so many words. This, I suppose may be exactly what the Food Official hoped to accomplish, but I ask you, is this a lawful procedure?

Not infrequently it happens that the premises were erroneous on which the Food Official based his notice to the public as to a certain article of food being illegal. Is anything done by the Food Official to correct his error by publishing the true facts in the next issue of his bulletin? Is anything done that will, in a measure at least, offset the great injury done to the manufacturer, the jobber and the retailer? Worse still, these condemnatory articles are republished in other bulletins, in the trade papers, and possibly in magazines, where they may form the basis of a general attack upon the food industry.

Now, all this might be condoned provided that the consumer, of whom we do not want to lose sight, were benefited by it in any manner. But is he? His dealer, refusing to handle the goods, publicly branded as illegal, deprives him thereby of an article of food to which he has become accustomed as a part of his daily diet, which he liked, and which furnished him the food he desired to purchase.

I do not mean to say that every time a food commissioner discovers what he believes to be a violation of the law, he should forthwith throw the matter into the courts. I do believe, however, that he should first notify the manufacturer of his attitude towards the product in question, and give the manufacturer a chance to be heard on the subject. When that is done, I believe, it will be found that in the great majority of cases the manufacturer will comply with the views or requests of the commissioner, and be thankful for the opportunity of doing so. But should the manufacturer feel that the commissioner is wrong, and should he wish to have the courts pass upon the points involved, it should be the duty of the commissioner to prosecute, instead of trying to drive the product off the market by means of prejudicial bulletins.

I wish it to be understood that I am speaking only for those manufacturers who want to comply with the law. I am aware of the fact that there may be manufacturers who, in choosing between prosecution and publicity would choose the latter, because of fear that they could not stand the test of prosecution. But you as Food Commissioners are to be congratulated upon the fact that, owing to the good effect which the enforcement of food laws has had upon the food manufacturing industry, this class of food manufacturers has nearly disappeared.

If the courts have found a food manufacturer guilty of deliberately selling misbranded or adulterated articles of food, by all means give such conviction the widest possible publicity through every available agency.

Notwithstanding all that has been said in daily papers and in monthly magazines, the fact remains that the food manufacturer desires more than the food officials, or even more than the consumer, that his product shall be pure and wholesome, and that it shall be truthfully labelled. He wants to meet, not only the letter of the law, but its spirit as well; and his intentions are as honorable as those of any other man engaged in legitimate business. If the Food Official will recognize this; if he will desist from treating the unconvicted manufacturer as a criminal offender; if he will preserve an unbiased mental attitude, and if he is willing to submit in cases where his views and those of the manufacturer clash, the question in dispute to an officer of the law, as for instance, the Attorney General of his State—a practice which I am glad to say is being followed by several of the food commissioners—there is no question but that the Food Officials will command not only the respect, but also the heartiest co-operation of the food manufacturer.

If the manufacturer and the Food Official will realize that there is nothing personal in their relations, and that both should serve the consumer to the best of their abilities, then, I say, the relations between the food commissioners and the food manufacturers cannot and will not be other than those existing between honorable men engaged in any line of business. To make a business successful the contracting parties must have respect for each other, and must stand ready to assist each other, and my answer therefore to the question, what should be the relations between Food Manufacturers and Food Commissioners, is that they should be those resulting from mutual respect and hearty co-operation. This is the era of the "Get together" spirit, and I venture to express the hope that the relations of the Food Commissioners and Food Manufacturers will always be governed by this spirit.

WHAT SHOULD BE THE RELATION BETWEEN FOOD MANUFACTURERS AND FOOD COMMISSIONERS.

By CHARLES F. SIMES, President National Confectioners' Association of the United States.

The following address was delivered at the Portland convention.

Mr. President and Commissioners:—As President of the National Confectioners' Association of the United States, an Association that for more than a quarter of a century has steadfastly fought for and maintained the purity of candy, and that has, on its own initiative, succeeded in placing Pure Candy Laws on the statute books of practically every State in the Union, it gives me great pleasure to meet you gentlemen who are directly concerned with the enforcement of those laws and with the continued maintenance of the purity of candy.

In answer to the question as to what should be the relation between the Food Manufacturers and Food Commisisoners, it occurs to me that, as President of our Association, there is but one answer to be made, and it is that that relation should be one of absolute confidence. I feel that the organization I represent has well merited the right to come here and ask you gentlemen to repose confidence in us. Our relations with the Food Officials have always been for the most part of the most friendly nature. You have always dealt kindly with us, and we want you to feel that we appreciate the same. But there have been some little difficulties that have arisen from time to time and that have caused us much annoyance and much regret, and it is those matters that have prompted me to come here to-day and ask for your confidence. I feel sure that had we enjoyed your confidence in the past to the full extent to which we feel entitled, that the prosecutions against confectioners would have been fewer by far than what they have been even though they have not been many.

A lack of confidence somewhere along the line has injured us—as it must always injure any industry in which the Food Officials of the country do not repose full confidence.

We have had our little troubles, as I said before, and my object in coming here is to endeavor to establish such relations with you that those troubles will be entirely things of the past and that in the future your officials and our Association may so work together that you can point to the Confectionery Industry as the pride of every good Food Commissioner's heart and a splendid example of what a Food Manufacturing Industry ought to be.

My idea about the relation between the Food Manufacturer and the Food Commissioners is, that it should be established on such basis that there will be no injury done to any Food Manufacturer that can possibly be avoided, and no prosecutions started until it becomes necessary to prosecute as a last resort. I would not have you understand that I do not realize your duty to enforce your laws, or that I would have you withhold the enforcement of the law against any wilful violator of the same; but what I mean is, that on the many questions that arise from time to time with respect to the meaning of the law, or the legality of a given practice, there should be a mutual exchange of ideas and a careful consideration of all points involved before the matter is brought to the Courts; I will even go further and say, before such a matter is brought to the attention of the public; because, after all, it is publicity of an accusation which works the greatest injury.

The manufacturing confectioners of the country have striven hard to maintain the purity of candy. We believe that you gentlemen give us full credit for the same. But occasionally things come up which do not meet with your approval, and it is of these matters that I want to speak.

Many years ago, before this Association was formed, there was a real adulteration of confectionery going on in the country. There were no food laws—or very few—to prohibit such practices, and few, if any, food officials to enforce such laws. Our Association was formed for the purpose of wiping out that evil. It did wipe it out so quickly and completely and held the ground it gained so firmly, that for a quarter of a century the purity of candy has been maintained to such a high degree that you may search the records in vain for evidence of real adulteration in the same. But within the last two or three years and with the aid of advanced science, it is with regret I say that some things were discovered in connection with confectionery that in the opinion of some officials were violations of the law. As a result numerous prosecutions were started against confectioners and I know that more or less injustice was done. It was unfortunate, because some of the very men who have devoted practically their lifetime to maintaining the purity of candy were involved in some of the prosecutions. So far as guilt is concerned, in the true sense of the word, "guilt" these men were as innocent as you or I, but they were technically guilty, through no fault of theirs, of the violation of the law, and their names injured accordingly. It is such matters as these that I would seek to avoid, and if you Food Officials will only repose confidence in our Association, I assure you that you will always find us willing to meet you more than half way in any matter that may arise. There is no ambition that I have that is greater than the one to establish such a relation with you, that in the future such a thing as prosecution of a confectioner will be unheard of. I am sure that this is not holding out a false hope, but that it is a thing entirely within the realms of possibility.

We have a well-formed organization that embraces within its membership practically all of the large manufacturing confectioners in the United States. These members look to us for advice, and I am glad to say that they follow our advice. When a question of importance arises and a circular is sent out from our Association on the subject, our members follow whatever advice we give them; we are thus in a position to control the practices of the industry to a very large extent. Unfortunately, however, there are some confectioners who do not belong to our fold, but in some respects we can control even those. We do not try to coerce our members, nor have we tried to compel them to do what we would like to have them do, but when our Association takes a stand on a matter our members know that it has been done only after the most careful consideration and that the Association will adhere to that position. Our members, know, further, that if they go contrary to the advice of our Association, they do so on their own responsibility. As a result, there are but few members who ever act without advice on matters of importance.

If we could only get you Food Officials to come to the offices of our Association and complain to us of things of which you do not approve, I am sure you would be gratified at the hearty welcome you would receive and the way in which we would consider the matter with you and work to adjust it to your satisfaction.

Our object is, in a sense, the same as yours; that is, to maintain the purity of candy. We go about it in one way and you in another. I do not wish to under-rate the good work that you have done, but I do wish to say that we, also, have accomplished a world of good in our own way. Why can't we have a little more confidence in one another? Why can't we confer about matters of importance? Why can't we confer about laws to be enacted? There is only one reason in the world, and that is because of a lack of confidence. This lack of confidence should not exist.

The confectionery industry has its problems to solve just the same as any other great manufacturing industry. We are making progress with rapid strides. Sometimes practices may exist of which you do not exactly approve, but it may be that it is impossible for our industry to change such practice until we can find a more practical way of producing the product involved. When we are confronted with manufacturing difficulties, we would like to have you Food Officials, and particularly your chemists, help us solve such problems, and not condemn us on matters that it is almost impossible for us to control. As I said before we, as an industry, have very little complaint to make of the treatment we have received at your hands, but we would like to cement even closer the good friendship that has existed. When you discover anything in candy that does not meet with your entire approval, just let us know what it is. Give the officers of our Association the chance to straighten it out. It may be a matter that cannot be straightened out in a day or a week—or a month; if such be the case take that fact into consideration and not only give us a reasonable time, but give us the advantage of your good advice as to how to solve the difficulty, whatever it may be.

Then again, we are constantly making progress. New methods of manufacture are employed, and new products are coming out from time to time. It may be that a new product made by a new process, or containing certain new ingredients may be a real improvement over the old product of the same kind, but made in a different way and with slightly different ingredients. Give us a chance to consider with you the question as to whether or not such products are inferior or better because of the change in the process of manufacture, or because of the new ingredients added. Let us settle all of these matters out of the courts if we can. It may be that sometimes we cannot agree and that it will be necessary to submit the matter to the courts for decision, but let us do so with a thorough understanding as to what we are doing— and in a friendly way.

I believe the time has come when the wilful and fraudulent adulteration of food is practically a thing of the past; but the technical adulteration of food, or the technical misbranding of food will probably always continue as long as there are laws that must be construed. Very few men can agree on the meaning of a law. Even the courts themselves do not agree. Sometimes a Supreme Court will stand practically evenly divided with, for example, four judges holding the law to mean one thing and five judges holding that it means something else. If such difference of opinion can exist among those specially trained to construe the meaning of a law, how can the ordinary food manufacturer be expected to always construe it correctly. He should not be too severely condemned if at times he makes a mistake. It has come to my notice that even with respect to such a matter as the size of type the printers, who are specially trained in such matters, cannot agree. Frequently it happens that a confectioner will send his labels to the printer with instructions that a certain size of type be used, and the labels be printed in a different size of type. How can a food manufacturer be expected to know the difference?

Our Association is making arrangements to keep you better posted on the work we are doing and to give you the benefit of the circulars that we are sending out. In return we ask your confidence. We ask that you give us full credit for trying to do what we understand the laws require us to do. If at times we make a mistake just help us to correct it, and try not to hurt our good name if you can avoid it.

In reading the literature of our Association, we ask you to bear in mind that we treat our members very much as parents would treat their children, and try to give them that advice that will keep them out of trouble. We hope you will read our literature and treat it in that spirit, and if you know that our advice is not being followed or that labelling is being used of which neither you nor we would approve, just give that member a chance to correct it. The same is true of ingredients that may be used. We have found, after years of experience, that there are mighty few confectioners in the United States who are not willing to take good advice and who will not thank you for pointing out to them a possible source of trouble.

I believe that really guilty violators of the food laws should have justice meted out to them promptly and in full measure, especially if they are guilty of real fraud. But I do not believe that mere technical violations of the law should be punished without warning, and from my observation of you gentlemen, I believe that you will agree with me.

Another thing, which seems of importance to us, that I would like to enlighten you in regard to, in case there is any misunderstanding on your part and that is, that our Association is not and has not been identified with any Association or Associations or Conferences of Food Associations in such a way as to entitle said Association or Conferences to use the name of our Association in any manner.

We feel that we can best serve our own interests through individual action and I trust, therefore, that you may, when the question of confectionery is involved, look to our Association only for expressions of opinions relative to any matters pertaining to confectionery.

It might not be amiss at this time for me to also tell you that not alone is our Association giving attention to the purity and truthful branding of confectionery, but the question of sanitation is being just as urgently followed up.

We retain a Consulting Sanitary Expert, Prof. S. C. Prescott of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Some of you may know him personally or by reputation, and if you do, I am sure you will realize that we have in our service the foremost expert in the practical questions of factory sanitation.

At our last annual convention, held in French Lick, Ind., and at the suggestion of Dr. H. E. Barnard of Indiana, our Association was the first Association, I believe, to go on record as advocating and endorsing the medical examination of all employees coming in contact with our products in the process of manufacturing and handling.

As I previously advised, our Association is preparing to furnish you with a complete set of all Food Laws and Sanitary Circulars issued by our Association, and will continue you on the mailing list for same, and in addition thereto, we shall mail each of you copies of our last Annual Proceedings, pamphlet Our Service, setting forth the services rendered by our Association during the last thirty-one years, of reported candy poisoning cases and harmful adulterations.

I trust this may evidence a desire on our part to take you into our confidence and that we may, in return, be the recipients of yours.

Lastly, I want to express a fond hope that you gentlemen may further earnestly, the question of uniformity between State and National Pure Food Laws, and I pledge you the sincere cooperation of our Association in that effort.

You have shown the right kind of spirit in asking us to meet with you here today. On behalf of the Confectioners I thank you for it. We have always had—and will continue to have—confidence in you, and in return we ask for yours.

ICE CREAM STANDARDS.

By HON. W. B. BARNES, Food Commissioner, Iowa.

NECESSITY FOR STANDARDS.

The following paper, read at the Portland convention, is of much interest:—

The necessity for standards in ice cream has developed within the last few years, with the increase of its manufacture on a commercial basis. The ice cream industry is, historically, quite as old as the manufacture of butter and cheese by the creamery and factory system. The first recorded manufacture of this commodity on a larger scale was by Jacob Fussell of Baltimore, in the year 1851. Previous to this time, all the ice cream that was consumed, and the amounts were small, was made by the servants in the kitchen. Since the time of Fussell, the growth of the industry was very slow, until within the decade beginning with 1900, when it was estimated that the amount of ice cream consumed has been increased ten-fold. The valuation of the ice cream industry in 1910 was $100,000,000 or one-eighth the value of the total dairy industry. In the state of Iowa last year, there was put out by our manufacturers, according to reports received by the department, over 3,000,000 gallons of ice cream, requiring the use of about 1,872,000 pounds of butter fat. Ice cream has become such a common dish, that it can be had at all restaurants, cafes, and at hotels and boarding houses it has come to be an often served dish.

Ice cream has come to be such a common article of consumption these days, that we firmly believe that food officials, legislators, and the public are justified in classifying ice cream as a food product, and demanding that the manufacturer thereof comply with such standards as legislators may see fit to enact into their food laws, the same as for any other food product. In fact, the President of the National Ice Cream Manufacturers' Association in addressing members of that body at their convention in Chicago last fall, made the statement that the ice cream industry has placed its product in the class of food products and has left behind the period when it was considered merely in the sense of a luxury. These words express exactly our ideas on the subject as to the position that ice cream has come to occupy in these days of various tastes and added comforts. We were particularly glad to hear the above statement, especially from the head of an association that has sought to overthrow ice cream standards generally and specifically the Iowa ice cream standard.

Ice cream is a product which may be very easily imitated. Consequently, in order to prevent adulteration, standards are necessary. Originally, ice cream was made by freezing cream with sweetening and flavoring materials added. But with the advance of its manufacture on a commercial scale, substitutions for the cream crept into its make-up, until at times, very little or no cream is used in the manufacture of so called ice cream by some concerns. In Iowa, we have one specific instance where a product was sold for ice cream, containing only .4% (four-tenths of one per cent.) butter fat.

As a protection for the scrupulous manufacturer who wishes to comply with the wishes of the consuming public who expect to receive an article in the semblance of cream when purchasing ice cream, practices like the above should be prohibited by law. Along this line, we wish to quote from the Hon. Judge Preston, state supreme judge of Iowa, in his decision upholding the constitutionality of the Iowa ice cream standard, and in which all of the Justices concurred. The point under discussion was relative to the subject as to whether it was within the police power of a state to fix a standard for ice cream.

> "It is conceded by the State that, to be a valid exercise of such power, (police), the act must have relation to the comfort, safety or welfare of the public, but that the welfare of the public involves or includes the right of the legislature to protect the public from fraud and deception; that the constitution does not secure to any one the privilege of defrauding the public; that it is impossible for consumers of ice cream to determine by any ordinary diligence the ingredients of the product, and that, without a standard, opportunity is afforded unscrupulous manufacturers of ice cream to palm off upon the public a much cheaper and inferior article for a higher quality at the price of the better and more costly product."

There is a necessity for standards on ice cream, First,—Because it is a food product; and second,—because it can be made up in such form that its main constituents need have no semblance of cream, thus giving an opportuity for fraud.

Our food laws are generally criminal statutes. Some courts say that a criminal statute must be specific and to the point in question; that matters of custom or usage, inference or intent are not admitted as competent evidence; that power can not be delegated to any person or commission to define a crime. A food standard, therefore, must of necessity be enacted in the same manner as any other criminal statute, if this be true.

Furthermore, a standard is necessary from the standpoint of preventing the use of adulterations in the constituents which go to make up ice cream, particularly the cream used. For instance, if a standard were not in force in our State, there would be nothing to prevent a substitution of other and cheaper fats, also inferior grades of butter fat, in ice cream for high class products. You are all aware of the very prominent part that homogenizing and emulsifying devices have come to take in the manufacturing of synthetic cream within the last few years. By the use of these devices, butter fat, good and inferior grades, oleomargarine, etc., may be incorporated in skim milk, milk, water, and milk powder, making a product which is very much like, and in fact is very difficult to distinguish from, ordinary cream. If it were not for a standard, it would be impossible for us to regulate the sale and manufacture of this synthetic cream, either as cream or made up into ice cream.

WHAT IS A REASONABLE STANDARD?

You are all aware of the fact that it matters not what line of endeavor you are engaged in, which throws you in contact with an individual or the general public, whether you are enagaged in private enterprise or doing public duty, it is imperative that reasonableness be exercised in order that justice be given all concerned. In a case of a reasonable fat standard, justice must be given both the consumer and the manufacturer.

From the standpoint of the consumer, he has a right to demand that in ice cream, he be given a product which is made from cream which has such amounts of sweetening and flavoring material added, as to make the finished product reach the highest state of palatability and be manufactured under sanitary conditions. The manufacturer has a right to demand that ice cream standards shall be such that they will allow him to use cream which conforms to the state standard for market cream, with added sugar, flavoring and binder, will result in a product, which under reasonable conditions of manufacture, will conform to the standard required by statute.

We do not wish to appear in the least to be egotistical when we say that we believe that in Iowa we have hit upon and enacted into our food law a standard which should be highly satisfactory to the consumer and which those who have had experience in the manufacture of ice cream, say is reasonable from the standpoint of the manufacturer. Our standard is as follows:—

> "1. Ice cream is the frozen product made from pure, wholesome, sweet cream, and sugar, with or without flavoring, and if desired, the addition of not to exceed one per cent. (1%) by weight of a harmless thickener, and contains not less than twelve per cent. (12%) by weight of milk fat, and the acidity shall not exceed three-tenths (0.3) of one per cent. (1%).
> 2. Fruit ice cream is the frozen product made from pure wholesome sweet cream, sugar, and sound, clean, mature fruits, and if desired, the addition of not to exceed one per cent. (1%) by weight of a harmless thickener, and contains not less than ten per cent. (10%) by weight of milk fat.
> 3. Nut ice cream is the frozen product made from pure wholesome sweet cream, sugar, and sound, non-rancid nuts, and, if desired, the addition of not to exceed one per cent. (1%) by weight of harmless thickener, and contains not less than ten per cent. (10%) by weight of milk fat."

No one will question the right to demand a pure wholesome and sweet product in the cream used for manufacturing, and in view of the fact, that ice cream takes its name from one of the most important constituents, that product should comply in its original state with the one from which it is named, —cream.

There is no necessity for the amount of sugar to be specified, because that this constituent will regulate itself, its lack or excess decreasing the palatibility of the ice cream. The same is true of the flavoring material. One per cent. of a harmless thickener or binder is sufficient to give the ice cream these qualities which make it possible to put the frozen product out in attractive form, where a sufficiently low degree of temperature is maintained. A binder in excess of this amount is useless for that purpose, and where it is used, the purpose is to mislead the consumer.

In regard to the fat content of ice cream, we believe that where a four per cent. decrease is allowed in that constituent from that of the original cream, in the plain ice creams, it is sufficient. This four per cent. decrease will allow for the decrease due to the addition of the sugar, flavoring material and binders, which contain no butter fat and will also allow for the fat content lessened due to mechanical losses.

Very rarely will occasion arise where a product which should legitimately be used for ice cream, which would contain .3% (three tenths of one per cent.) of acid. Any ice cream which contains more than that amount of acid has not peen handled properly and should not be allowed the privilege of sale.

It was with no little degree of satisfaction that we learned that the National Association of Dairy Instructors at their meeting in Chicago last fall, adopted resolutions endorsing standards, which correspond almost identically with those on the Iowa statutes.

The addition of fruit and nuts to ice cream decreases the butter fat content, the same as other non-butterfat containing substances. Consequently, a decrease in the fat content should be allowed and two per cent. decrease from that of the plain ice cream in the total is a very liberal allowance from the standpoint of both the consumer and the manufacturer.

We firmly believe that the standards suggested and which are written in our Iowa statutes are reasonable.

FEASIBILITY OF A MILK FAT STANDARD.

In regard to the feasibility of a fat standard, we believe that as far as it goes, it is very practical. However, we will not concede that it alone is sufficient. As a general rule, it is found that the main differences in ice cream lie in their fat contents. You will generally find that an ice cream which contains the proper amount of fat will otherwise conform to the standard which should be required.

We know that some are opposed to fat standards because they say it is impossible to make accurate butter fat tests; that the butter fat content varies in different parts of the container, etc.

It is entirely practical to make butter fat determinations in ice cream by the use of Babcock testing apparatus, and therefore, we have no sympathy with those who are opposed to a butter fat standard because its determination is not impossible either in the hands of the manufacturer or the professional analyst. With a little practice, ice cream testing for butter fat becomes comparatively simple.

We have studied thoroughly the proposition of variation of butter fat content tests of ice cream, taken from different parts of the container, and are convinced that where the proper ingredients are used in ice cream to start with; the cream is kept properly agitated during the process of manufacture, where the ice cream as soon as it is taken from the freezer is started properly on the course of hardening, and this in no way is delayed until completely refrigerated; that where the ice cream is kept sufficiently cold, while in the possession of the manufacturer; and is kept properly packed in going to, and while in the hands of the retailer, there is no separation of the butter fat in the ice cream.

Proper methods and attention to details are as necessary in the manufacture of ice cream as in the manufacture of any other standardized food product and because of the fact that by slack methods, variations of fat content can occur, we see no reason for declaring that this should be an excuse for desiring that the fat standard is impractical.

SHOULD "FILLERS" BE PERMITTED AND WHAT FILLER IS LEAST OBJECTIONABLE AND IN WHAT QUANTITY?

The use of fillers and binders should both be permitted in the manufacture of ice cream. In order to get straight in the minds of all present, the use of the terms, "binder" and "filler" we will try and make plain the purpose for which they are intended.

A filler is any harmless substance which may be added, which partakes of the nature of milk products and is added for the purpose of increasing the solids in the ice cream and gives to it, what we call a heavier body. Examples of fillers used in our state, are condensed milk, either skimmed, whole, or sweetened; and milk powder. The latter has grown into use to a very great extent, within the last four or five years.

A binder is any substance added to ice cream which will aid in giving consistency to the cream, which helps it to "stand up" to use the term current among manufacturers. It prevents the crystallization of the water in the ice cream, which should it take place, gives a piece of ice cream which is coarse or icy. Examples of binders are gelatin, gum arabic, gum tragacanth, and the so-called ice cream powders, which contain largely gelatin and in some cases percentages of the gum products. Gelatin, we are well aware, is a packing house by-product, and as in other commercial products, is put up under various grades of purity and standards of sanitation. We can see no objection to its use, provided the best grades of it are used, and are recommending that the clear leaf gelatin be used. The gums mentioned being purely vegetable products cannot be objected to, where used in only such quantities as to serve the above mentioned purpose of a binder. However, being more expensive they are not used so extensively. As to what binder would be least objectionable, we perhaps, would be justified in saying, that the vegetable products should come first. However, we cannot object to the use of gelatin of the proper grade.

FEDERAL VERSUS STATE REGULATIONS.

It would be a great pleasure to Pennsylvania if the national food laws and the decisions under them were always in accord with the laws, decisions, rules and regulations that obtain here. It would put an end to considerable friction and might aid some stubborn or careless dealers in keeping out of the clutches of the law and thus save money. It is very disirable that the National and State regulations should resemble each other as much as possible. Uniformity is certainly an end toward which both the nation and the states should labor. Possibly it may come into general vogue some day.

But uniformity is not desirable if to secure it Pennsylvania must lower her standard and permit some things her lawmakers believe to be harmful to the consuming public. The ideal of the Pennsylvania Legislature, cordially concurred in and seconded by succeeding executives, has been to exclude from our markets all unhealthy or questionable food products. Here we have constructed during the years that have succeeded the organization of the pure food division a body of laws that have done much to protect the consumer from imposition and injury at the hands of careless or unscrupulous dealers.

Pennsylvania believes that all articles of food put on the market within her borders should be free from adulterations of every sort. Where there is a division of opinion among chemical experts concerning the effect of a certain substance upon the human constitution she prefers to give the consumer, rather than the vender, the benefit of the doubt. Hence she prohibits the use of various substances which are known, or believed to be, injurious, as well as of other things, harmless in themselves, but intended to reduce the value of the article manufactured as well as to increase the profit of the manufacturer at the expense of the consumer. Pennsylvania has so legislated as to make it unlawful to deceive the purchaser concerning the actual contents of packages of food offered for sale to her people. She looks out for the consumer. The whole idea of her legislation concerning food products is that the purchaser shall receive precisely what he asks for; or, if not that, that the label on the package shall tell him what he is receiving.

The sale of bleached flour is unlawful in this State. No matter what federal courts may decide or what federal decisions may allow, the law of Pennsylvania specifically forbids the sale of such flour to its people. It is the belief of the lawmakers here that the bleaching process so changes the composition of flour as to make it unhealthy. So the Legislature has forbidden the sale of bleached flour and the law will be enforced. We are very sorry that some folks have permitted themselves to be deluded by the impression that federal rules supersede State laws and rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof. They do not. The only safe course for dealers is to procure and study the laws of this State concerning food products and then to obey them. It is greatly to be desired that the federal government move up to the standard fixed by Pennsylvania; it would be a great misfortune were Pennsylvania to lower her standards.

PROSECUTIONS ORDERED DURING AUGUST.

Twenty more prosecutions were ordered by the Dairy and Food Commissioner during the month of August, 1914, than in July, thus demonstrating the continued determination of some unwise dealers to disregard the laws of the Commonwealth and the vigilance of the agents of the Dairy and Food Division. If men will disregard the food laws they are likely to come to grief.

Two prosecutions were instituted for violation of the oleomargarine act. One was in Allegheny County, the other in Philadelphia. One was for selling colored oleomargarine, unstamped; in the other case colored oleomargarine was sold as butter.

Three prosecutions were ordered for violation of the cold storage act, all in Philadelphia. In each instance the suit was brought for the sale of pork chops, not properly marked.

In Philadelphia three dealers were arrested on the charge of selling eggs unfit for food purposes.

Under the pure food act seven prosecutions in all were instituted, as follows: Selling leg of mutton unfit for food purposes, 1; selling beef unfit for food purposes, 2; selling watermelons unfit for food purposes, 4. The unfortunates in these cases do business in Philadelphia.

Nine violations of the non-alcoholic drinks act were detected and prosecuted. The offenses were committed in Bucks, Chester and Philadelphia counties, respectively, and were as follows: Selling grape soda, misbranded and artificially flavored, 1; raspberry soda, misbranded, artificially flavored, 1; strawberry soda, misbranded, artificially flavored, 1; cherry soda, misbranded, artificially flavored, 2; strawberry soda, misbranded, artificially colored, 1; lemon soda, sweetened and preserved with saccharin, 1; strawberry soda, sweetened and preserved with saccharin, 1; strawberry soda, sweetened and preserved with saccharin, artificially flavored, 1.

Under the cream and milk act 27 violations of law were detected and proceedings instituted against the offenders. The illegal sales were as follows: Cream, low in butter fat, 4; milk, low in fat and solids, watered and skimmed, 1; milk, low in fat and solids, skimmed, 3; milk, low in solids, 8; milk watered, 4; milk, low in solids and fat, 7. These offenses were committed in Allegheny, Cambria, Columbia, Elk, Luzerne, Schuylkill and Westmoreland counties.

The largest number of prosecutions occurred by reason of violation of the ice cream act. These were brought in Allegheny, Armstrong, Bedford, Butler, Cambria, Columbia, Monroe, Philadelphia, Somerset, Washington and Westmoreland counties. They were: Selling chocolate ice cream, low in butter fat, 6; vanilla ice cream, low in butterfat, 29.

The prosecutions ordered totalled 86.

THE BANKER AND THE FARMER.

The great question how to improve agriculture and rural life in United States is now being examined from a new point of view—that of the banker, says the Youth's Companion. The American Bankers' Association has an agricultural commission that conducts a magazine, the Banker-Farmer, and in thirty-eight states the state bankers' associations have committees on agriculture and vocational education. The work that these organizations do bids fair to accomplish remarkable results.

If, instead of impoverishing his land by wasteful methods, the farmer works systematically to improve the fertility of his soil, he obviously makes his farm more valuable. By making it more valuable, he becomes able to borrow money at an easy rate on a mortgage running for a long term. The proper treatment of the soil, therefore, is one of the first things concerning which the banker gives the farmer advice and help. He encourages the farmers of the county to organize and employ a "field demonstrator," a man thoroughly grounded in the theory and practice of scientific farming. On the principle of "help for self-help," the federal government usually pays part of the expenses of a county demonstrator. The "soil doctor," traveling from farm to farm in his automobile, can, if he is the right kind of man, accomplish more than any amount of indirect teaching.

The work of helping the farmer to "create a soil as well as a bank reserve" is, however, only a small part of the constructive work of the banker-farmer alliance. Other enterprises are: Providing better seed, producing more live stock, creating better conditions of marketing, establishing rural credits, making better roads, getting better schools and creating community centres.

Such an enterprise has become possible, because within the past few years, both banker and farmer have seen a new light. The farmer has realized that agriculture is, after all, a business, and like any other business, is doomed to fail if inefficiently managed. The banker, on his part, in considering the farmer as a possible customer, is taking a broader view of his own opportunities. He is learning the value of "taking interest in people as well as from them." In consequence, both parties are happier and more prosperous.

The resources of bankers of the country will soon be at the service of the farms as they have never been in the past. Some form of legislation for establishing rural credit banks is almost certain to pass Congress next winter, and, under the new federal reserve act, as the comptroller of the currency announces, $500,000,000 of money in the national banks of the country is now available for farm mortgage loans.

MILK PER ACRE.

If it may be assumed that the farm of the average patron is fairly well adapted to dairying, that the patron himself is inclined toward dairying, rather than, let us say fruit growing, and that his cows are fairly good, then it will be of interest to note how the farm is made to respond to this dairy inclination.

There are frequently noted yields as low as 250 pounds of milk per acre cultivated including pasture, but some good patrons obtain 750 to 800 pounds per acre. Even this is little enough for there are plenty of authentic records of 1,000 and 2,100 pounds of milk per acre. It should not be extremely difficult to obtain more than this, even 2,500 or 3,000 pounds. This latter figure is a long way ahead of the yields already mentioned of only 250 pounds which may be found on so many so-called dairy farms and is indicative of the possibilities in reach of the factory patron who is really anxious to attain first rank.

It is questionable if the average yield for Ontario is more than 600 pounds of milk per acre. If loyal, whole-hearted support is given to the local creamery and to our national industry of dairying, the farm and the dairy herd will be made far more productive. Great help will be derived by keeping individual records of each cow, because the old-established complacent "average" cow has no intention whatever of assisting the average patron to get 3,000 pounds of milk from the average acre. The first necessary step is to know for certain that each cow is a good producer, then one may aim with more hope at $30 or $40 per acre.—Montreal Trade Bulletin.

CREAMERY MARKETING OF EGGS FEASIBLE.

Owing to the fact that poor eggs have a tendency to reduce consumption, the question of getting eggs on the market in good condition is an important one. An agency well fitted to handle the farmer's eggs and bring them to the consumer's table to good advantage is the community creamery according to James G. Halpin, of the University of Wisconsin.

The creameryman is constantly handling a perishable product and consequently has the facilities for keeping eggs away from foul air and bad odors. The average groceryman, on the other hand, uses practically the same methods in handling eggs that he does potatoes, with the result that he helps large quantities of eggs to spoil every year. If the housewife could be certain of securing a uniform grade of good eggs, she would use them liberally many times, regardless of the cost.

The circle plan of marketing which is a form of co-operation which has proven successful in Denmark might be adopted in this country with equally good results. Few creameries collect cream less than every other day and instead of taking a half load on many routes, they might well use the extra space in hauling eggs. The eggs could be sorted at the creamery, put up in fancy cartons, such as are commonly used for parcel post shipments today, and sold to a select trade at a reasonable profit. In this way waste would be avoided and a more steady price maintained.

Co-operative storage plants in the smaller towns would do away with the practice of shipping eggs in the summer and buying them back in the winter as storage eggs. With the establishment of local cold storage houses, or even individual storage plants in the country, the eggs could put up at the time they are produced at less expense and without the numerous breakage losses which occur when eggs are shipped long distances. However, shrewd business management upon a sound basis is needed before these co-operative storage plants can succeed.

One bad egg in a dozen spoils a customer's desire for eggs and reduces sales in market prices from 15 to 20 per cent. With a little care and proper handling on the part of the producer this great loss could be eliminated and fresh eggs, farm eggs or cold storage eggs would become desirable, wholesome and eatable products.

Eggs, to demand the highest market prices, must be infertile, uniform and fresh. By keeping the hens and roosters separate, gathering the eggs several times a day, storing them in a cool dark place and marketing them before they are more than a few days old, a commodity can be delivered that will delight the palate of the city customers.

In order to make assurance doubly certain, producers of fancy eggs always candle their product before placing them upon the market. Eggs handled in this manner may be placed in cold storage for any reasonable length of time and will come out wholesome and eatable without the bad reputation so characteristic of cold storage eggs.—Wisconsin Country Magazine.

WHAT THE PANAMA-PACIFIC WILL DO FOR FARMERS.

In the Department of Agriculture at the Panama-Pacific Exposition all the modern methods of intensive farming will be shown, the treatment of soils and the uses of machinery. Suppose as a result of the general ideas contained therein, absorbed and applied, the average acre production in the United States should be increased one bushel, this would add on the 1913 basis 49,601,000 bushels of wheat, valued at $38,192,770 to the annual productive wealth of the country. On the same basis an increase of one bushel per acre would add $106,884,000 bushels of corn annually with a farm value of $75,566,988. Take cotton as an example. The United States crop production 1912-13 was 7,064,500,000 pounds. Suppose as a result of exhibits and considerations at the exposition it would sell in the markets of the world for one cent per pound more, this would add $70,645,000 to the annual wealth production of the country.

Let us still take another view of the importance of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to the agriculture of the world. Taking only the countries that have accepted the invitation to participate, and including therewith their colonies, and the United States and island possessions, and it appears that more than eight hundred million of people living upon more than twenty-three million square miles of territory will be represented at the San Francisco fair. If there should be disseminated from the exposition but a single idea that would render more productive the tillable area of this vast territory how much it might mean in substance, and consequently to hope and happiness of these hundreds of millions.—Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal.

DAIRYING AS VIEWED BY THE SOUTH.

Dairying is the safest and most abiding of all the animal industries, remarks the Southern Ruralist. During times when prices for all other farm products were falling or fluctuating, the price of dairy products has remained firm or slightly increased. The average price of butter through the summer and winter has remained more nearly the same for the past twenty years than any other food commodity. The demand for these products is increasing every year, much faster than the supply, and the price is constantly rising. As the population of our country becomes more dense, this demand will in all probability increase more and more; the average consumption per capita is now greater than it was ten years ago.

As land becomes more costly dairying will come more into prominence as a form of intensive farming. The dairy cow is one of the most profitable animals on the farm. She utilizes most of her feed for producing milk instead of storing it in the form of flesh. She is, therefore, an economical producer. She will produce twenty or thirty pounds of milk per day, containing, perhaps, a pound of butter fat, or three pounds of cheese, on the same amount of food that a beef steer will require to lay on two or three pounds of fat per day. She will continue this work for years, while we may say the beef steer must be sold off and renewed several times during this period, as it becomes less profitable to continue feeding him as age advances. In the future of agriculture the beef steer is certain to decline first, because he is not an economical animal, while the dairy cow is becoming more and more profitable with each generation.

Dairy farming preserves and builds up the fertility of the land better than any other system. The farmer is able to use all his rough land and can feed to his own animals all the grains and fodder that land will produce. In this way he secures a higher price for his crops and retains the fertilizing ingredients on his farm in the manure.

The greatest argument in favor of dairying is found in the fact that the products command a ready sale for cash and bring into circulation and in the farmer's hands a larger amount of money than any other system of farming. It is estimated that there are 6,000,000 farmers in the United States who are more or less directly interested in dairy farming. The value of their annual product in milk, butter and cheese is fully $700,000,000. The annual earnings of the cows of the State of Wisconsin alone reaches $35,000,000. In New York State nearly 300,000 persons are engaged in the dairy industry. Iowa has 1,000 creameries with 75,000 patrons. Minnesota has 800 creameries with 50,000 farmers as patrons.

The next greatest influence of dairy farming is in raising the standard of intelligence of the people and the material prosperity of the community. When once a farmer's attention is aroused in favor of dairying and stock raising, he will have better buildings on his farm, better fences, better methods of feeding, better breeding, and a better mode of life for himself and family. The dairy farmer, in order to keep pace with modern methods, must be progressive and keep wide awake. New ideas call for constant improvement and improvements demand higher thought and intelligence, every creamery and cheese factory in a dairy center, acting as a school for the promotion of the best thought on all agricultural questions.

There is no community so thrifty, so well satisfied, so prosperous, as one devoted to dairying. The history of the industry in other States will show beyond question what can be done in this line. For example, ten year ago in Minnesota the farmers were all raising wheat, and the State was not at all recognized as a dairy section. Very little of her butter was sold as Minnesota butter, what few creameries she had shipped their butter to Elgin and sold it through the markets as Elgin butter. To-day Minnesota butter has a national reputation, the dairy industry has increased enormously and the prosperity of the State is far in advance of what it was under the old regime.

The dairy farmer is one of the best customers of the manufacturer and merchant. He must have the most improved labor-saving machines for growing his crops in order to properly care for his cows. In fact, the dairymen are the cream of the farmers of America, and are by force of character and general intelligence the leaders of these communities. They are the men who set the pace; other farmers follow.

FREE TRADE IN MILK.

How much more are the farmers of the United States destined to lose through free trade in milk and cream? asks the American Economist. Probably as much as, and perhaps more than the loss on any other agricultural product by reason of free trade. The Payne-Aldrich tariff law of 1909 reads:

"Fresh milk, two cents per gallon; cream five cents per gallon."

"Milk preserved or condensed, or sterilized by heating and other processes, including weight of immediate coverings, two cents per pound; sugar of milk, five cents per pound."

The free list of the Underwood tariff law of 1913 reads:

"Milk and cream, including milk or cream preserved or condensed or sterilized by heating or other processes, and sugar of milk."

The above quotation from the tariff law of 1913 compared from the quotation from the law of 1909, at first blush, does not appear startling, but investigation and analysis show that the placing of milk and evaporated milk alone upon the free list will be a serious blow to the farmers of the United States, reducing as it will, their incomes by many millions of dollars. Briefly the situation is this:—

The production of condensed and evaporated milk in the United States by about sixty companies scattered all over the country, amounts annually to between twelve and thirteen million cases, taking as a base a case of 48 cans of 15½ ounces each, or 581,250,000 pounds.

The removal of the duties enables foreign producers to land their product in this country at $1 a case less than under the Payne-Aldrich law, the weight of the case, including the weight of the immediate coverings, being 50 pounds.

The quantity of raw milk necessary to produce a pound of condensed milk is 2.6 pounds; of evaporated milk a trifle less; the number of pounds of raw milk necessary to produce the condensed and evaporated milk made in the United States is 1,433,125,000.

The price paid by factories to farmers for milk ranged in 1913 from $1.28 cents per hundred pounds in June, to $1.88 per hundred pounds in December. The average reduction in price paid to American farmers for their milk will have to be about 50 cents per hundred pounds to enable the domestic producers of condensed and evaporated milk to hold the domestic market.

Already the foreign manufacturers of condensed milk are making earnest efforts to capture the American market. Holland condensed milk is being prominently advertised for the first time.

To compete with these and other foreign producers, the American producers must, necessarily, reduce the price paid to the farmers for raw milk. A reduction in the other costs of production cannot be much, as the labor cost in the production of condensed milk, averages but 6½ per cent. of the total cost, and the other items of production cost, except milk, do not exceed an average of 35½ per cent., so that practically 58 per cent. of the cost of production is the cost of the raw milk—the price paid to the farmers.

As the duty removed from condensed milk amounts to $1 a case, the domestic manufacturer, in order to hold the market, must reduce his reduction cost by approximately that amount, and 58 per cent. of this reduction, or 58 cents, must come mostly out of the farmer. A reduction of 58 cents on each case of condensed milk means a reduction of 50 cents per hundred pounds in the price paid for raw milk or a total of $7,265,625.

As the sixty condensed milk companies are scattered all over the union, it is perfectly plain that the placing of condensed milk on the free list, necessitating, as it does, a reduction in the price to the farmers from raw milk, will have an influence in reducing the price paid for milk. This brings the matter right home to every farmer in the country.

The farmer's cost of producing milk is practically all labor, and to reduce his cost of production the farmer must reduce the wages paid to farm laborers to a point competing with the wages of farm laborers in other countries. Dairy farm hand wages in the United States average $30 per month with subsistence. In Switzerland they run from $2 to $3 a week, and from $7.72 to $15.44 per month. Holland (average), $1.97 per week, with subsistence; Denmark, $10.72 to $13.40 per month with subsistence; Norway the same as Denmark for men, $8.04 to $10.72 for young men, $5.36 to $6.70 for women and a large proportion of the work is done by women.

This brings the matter right home to every farm laborer in the country. If milk prices are cut down so must be cut down the wages earned by farm hands engaged in dairying. If corn prices are cut down by the free trade competition of cheaper corn from Argentina, so must be cut down wages paid to American farm labor employed in growing corn. So it must inevitably be all along the line. The farmers and their hired help must all suffer through free trade. And when the farmers suffer many others suffer with them.

BUYING MILK BY WEIGHT OR MEASURE.

The following is taken from a Bulletin issued by the United States Department of Agriculture: During the last year personal visits have been made to about eighty-seven city milk plants in four of the larger eastern cities. Of these plants it was found that only six were buying milk by weight, twenty-one were buying part by weight and part by measure and the remainder were buying entirely by measure.

The amount of milk bought by weight is somewhat larger than the proportion of dealers would indicate, as in most cases it was the larger dealers who bought in this way. However it seems that the practice of buying milk by measure is altogether too common.

At one plant fifty-five ten-gallon cans of milk are weighed, first weighing the full can and after draining the can on a drip pan in the usual way, weighing the empty one. The net weight of the milk varied over a range of 5¾ pounds, showing that this dealer, at least, was not buying his milk on an accurate basis. The lowest weight was eighty pounds while the highest was 85¾ pounds, the average of the fifty-five cans being 83¼, or 2¾ pounds less than the usual weight for ten gallons of milk; this shows in this case, a shortage of 3.19 per cent. Only cans that were full and supposed to hold ten gallons were weighed and cans that were not full were not taken into consideration. Two cases of quart bottles put out by this dealer were also weighed on fine balance scales. The average net weight was 2.115 pounds per quart. At this rate the dealer was getting 39.36 quarts of milk from each can of 83¾ pounds, or a loss of 0.64 quart (1.6 per cent.) on each can.

Of course the easiest way to handle milk by the weight system is through the country receiving station, but if the dealers who do not have these stations would have the milk weighed on its arrival at the city plant, and credit given for the weight of milk only, much inaccuracy would be avoided and the dealer would know exactly how much milk he receives each day—an important link in his accounting system.

It must also be considered that when milk is bought by measure and is subsequently cooled to a lower temperature, there is an additional shrinkage. Experiments have shown that this shrinkage amounts to at least 0.2 per cent. in cooling milk from 70 F. to 50 F.

SUMMER DRINKS.

It is with gratification observed that in many cities business men are becoming addicted to the buttermilk habit as well as to the afternoon tea habit that has long been considered a British institution, remarks the Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal. Many a downtown bar is now serving buttermilk regularly which three years ago had no call for it. This beverage, we are assured by more than one consumer of cocktails aforetime, is a more genuine and enduring quencher of thirst than anything out of a bottle. Even in towns and localities not yet gone "dry" there is not the same demand for the elevated spheroid as formerly, and men of standing in the business world no longer "see" the habit of keeping the Campbells-a-coming, with one foot on the rail, until a late hour.

It behooves the women of America to help the buttermilk movement along. An overload of milk may cause the consumer to feel like a prime vealy Durham and want to try imaginary horns on a telephone post or to playfully remark "Brrk—baa" while kicking up his heels—but at least it will not harden his heart with "John Barleycorn's" remorseless "white logic" or send him home at midnight to hold high carnival with his wife, the chairs and the chinaware, while the children crawl under the bed.

In no way can this movement be better encouraged than by looking well to the purity of the city's milk supply. No man is going to be persuaded that a glass of buttermilk old and sour, or tasting of moldy cans, is to be preferred to the cool and foamy schooners of years agone, but if the dealers will put out the right kind of a product they will find ready sale for same, a buttermilk, so called, which is when it's good a fermented milk. Creameries as well as milk plants will find it a profitable side line.

A PROFITABLE ARTICLE.

From the Retailer's Journal.

None who reads the newspapers and current literature of to-day can fail to remark the frequency with which the words "hygiene" and "hygienic" occur. The question of health is to the front as never before, and is universally recognized as a matter of national and vital importance. All this is but a part of a great movement for the betterment of mankind; and the movement is a growing one.

The fact that milk is particularly susceptible to absorb floating germs, turns sour and otherwise deteriorates, has served to draw special attention to the right treatment and keeping of this invaluable liquid food. Nor are the young folks—more particularly the babies who live upon milk almost exclusively—alone concerned for the entire household take milk in one form or another; sometimes in the shape of the straight article or as buttermilk, and if not thus in draught at least as a diluent to tea or coffee.

The grocer is much interested in this matter of milk, and it will pay him well to give his thoughtful attention to it, and to push it along more particularly in its pasteurized and sealed bottle form. No neighborhood is without its complement of babies, and the needs of the little ones are just now clamant—and clamant in more ways than one, for the long summer months are particularly trying to them, and if their natural food is in the least affected their sensitive stomachs are upset and their protests are shrill and persistent, to the upsetting of the entire house.

The grocer who can be relied upon at all times of the day, to dispense cool, pure milk, is a benefactor to the entire neighborhood in which he does business. A storekeeper of this kind soon establishes a reputation for himself. His business will grow steadily, for mothers are grateful, and will talk endlessly of baby and how he meets baby's wants.

Many a grocer owes his success to attention to details—and milk is something more than an ordinary detail it is the one universal food.

Good milk, more particularly in the residential district, is a considerable trade getter, and what is more such trade is apt to stick. In the long torrid months, milk should be kept, it need scarcely be said, at the right temperature in a sanitary refrigerator.

PUBLICITY THAT HELPS.

"Why We Really Ought to Eat More Fish," is the title of an interesting article written by Rene Bach in the New York American from which the following extracts are taken:

What do you know about fish. Not much, evidently, if the government experts are to be believed. They assert that the fisheries resources of this country have hardly begun to be utilized; that the average American housewife is not even acquainted with most of the food fishes offered for sale at the market and that if she did know them she would be unable to cook them properly.

This is a matter of importance because of the rise in the price of meats. Undoubtedly from this time on beef, mutton, pork and poultry will continue to go up, until at length they will reach a point where the moderately well-to-do will be obliged to restrict their consumption of such luxuries, while the poor will have to go without them altogether.

What is to be done? The answer is that most people will be compelled to eat much more fish, replacing with it the over-costly meat of beast and fowl. In Europe this has been done for centuries and we must copy the example.

The wholesale cost of fish is almost absurdly low as compared with that of meat. In January (which is the dearest month) at Fulton Market in New York City, the ordinary price of halibut is less than two cents a pound; cod, five to eight cents; haddock, three to six cents; polock, four to six cents; weak fish, nine to eleven cents; sea bass, six to nine cents. But this is the time of greatest scarcity. Usually the fishes above mentioned are marketed for less than half the cost stated—that is to say at wholesale.

A visit to any large wholesale fish market in this country would be a voyage of discovery to the average consumer. The housewife will there see more kinds of fish for sale than she had supposed in the sea. But such a market shows little variety when compared with the great central fish market in Paris or the wonderful market on the Grand Canal in Venice.

In those foreign markets, spread out in trays, garnished with green and brown and red seaweeds, are delicacies that our fishermen never trouble to bring on shore because American housewives do not recognize them as desirable food. The famous soup of Naples made from a squid (a kind of cuttlefish) is eaten here only by Italians.

A person who has enjoyed the appetizing and satisfying dishes of fish served so universally in European countries finds a woeful lack of ability on the part of the American cook to utilize to the best advantage even high class fishes, and a hopeless incompetence when the less desirable varieties are used. There attractive sauces that add flavor and piquancy are almost unknown here. The many accessory dishes such as salads, croquettes and pates, that can be made from fish are never considered. It is seriously suggested that we should follow the example of Germany and establish classes in the art of fish cookery.

The prevailing ignorance of the usefulness of frozen fish is extraordinary. There is hardly one American housewife in 10,000 who would not refuse hard frozen salmon at fifteen cents a pound in favor of fresh caught cod at the same price.

The foreign born population in the congested districts of our large cities care nothing about the name of a fish if it is cheap and good to eat. And if it be hard frozen the fact does not weigh against it when the price is low. Consequently we find frozen whiting and other plentiful fish selling for a few cents a pound in inland towns, when shops in the big cities are charging double price for the same article thawed to simulate fresh caught fish and sold as fresh—a condition directly traceable to the ignorance of the consumer.

There is also a widespread idea that fish is less nutritious than meat—that it does not furnish as much high grade food material per pound. This is an absurb notion. Halibut steak, for example, pound per pound contains as much of the stuff that goes to make muscle and blood as lean mutton. Flounder is very nearly equal to ham. Bluefish surpasses round of beef.

The foreign born people of the United States are to-day the fish consumers of the nation. They have brought fish eating habits with them from their native countries. Whereas we have done little to stimulate our fisheries, the older nations have expended and are expending every effort to gather the crops that the waters yield so abundantly and to deliver them cheaply and in prime condition to their people in farthest inland towns.

England can produce only a portion of her meat supply, but her fisheries catch all the fish she wants with a large surplus for export. Herring is the most important catch, immense quantities of that fish going cured or salted, to Russia and Germany.

No other country possesses fishery resources anywhere nearly approaching those of the United States. We have not only our great length of Pacific and Atlantic coasts, with the shores of the Gulf of Mexico added but also the Great Lakes—sources from which our inland territory may readily be supplied. These waters furnish a practically inexhaustible supply.

Some of our fishes it is true have been driven by destructive fishing methods, alarmingly near to extermination. The shad is rapidly diminishing in numbers, and the west coast is facing a like diminution of the salmon unless it heeds the warning and insures protection for this valuable finny species by providing sufficient spawning and nursery grounds for the development of the young fry. But these remarks apply only to a few kinds of fishes that run up the rivers to lay their eggs. Not even in the dimmest distance can we see any lessening in the fish of the ocean. Even in the Great Lakes it would seem that we have an unlimited supply. According to the testimony of experienced fishermen there are now more fish in sight in the Great Lakes than ever before.

During the year for 1908 (the last for which reliable figures are available), the production of the fisheries of the United States, including Alaska, was 2,111,267,415 pounds, representing a value of $65,877,443. The Atlantic coast alone produced sixty-six per cent. of this magnificent total, the Pacific coast ranking second with products valued at 13 per cent. The fresh water fishery products, with a value of 13 per cent. of the whole, made in themselves, a wonderful showing.

ARSENIC IN JELLY AND CANDY.

A dispatch from Washington says the accidental discovery of arsenic in jelly, candy and chocolate and of lead in cream of tartar has caused one corporation to be fined $100 and three corporations to be fined $50 each for the shipment of such adulterated products in interstate commerce. In every case the arsenic and lead appear to have found their way into the products through either ignorance or carelessness on the part of the manufacturer. In order to protect himself he should have procured materials guaranteed by his vendor under the food and drugs act, thus shifting the responsibility from himself, or else made certain by a personal investigation that they contained no injurious ingredients.

According to an announcement of the United States Department of Agriculture, the Williams Bros. Co., of Detroit, Mich., has been fined $100 for sending four brands of adulterated jelly into Missouri. One brand contained seven parts of arsenic per million. Two of the brands contained eight parts and the fourth twenty parts per million, which might render the jelly injurious to health.

The Catawba Candy Company of Sandusky, O., was also fined $50 and costs for sending into North Carolina and Illinois quantities of "Italian Cream" and into Oklahoma a quantity of "Iced Squares," all of which contained arsenic in either the candy or coating or both. Leo Benjamin, of New York City, according to the announcement, was fined $50 for shipping into Pennsylvania "Chocolate Cremolin" which contained arsenic. It also contained another mineral substance, a crude oxid of iron, which acted both as a color and a cocoa substitute. The label stated that "this Cremolin contains a powdered cocoa and a little harmless coloring."

The Pan Chemical Company of New York City, was fined $50 for shipping a quantity of adulterated cream of tarter into the State of Washington. It contained lead, a poisonous ingredient, in the amount of 62 parts per million which might render it injurious to health.

SANITATION IN GROCERY STORES.

Great attention is being paid in these modern days to correct sanitation in every place and department of life, remarked the Retailers' Journal.

The grocery store is especially the object of observation and inspection, from the fact that it is the fountain of food supply, the consumer's pantry and the cold storage department for the city dweller in flat buildings.

In this connection it is desirable that the grocer keep abreast of the times and that he measure up to modern education and investigation along scientific sanitary lines.

The screening of doors and windows to exclude bugs and flies, covering bins, the separating of goods that are likely to prove contaminating in odor and flavor to other kinds, the exclusion from stores of cats, dogs and rats, mice, bugs and ants are all important.

Still more important, however, is the actual preparation for the preservation of food and appliances for that purpose are being gradually introduced into the better class of stores. Schools for women are all teaching domestic economy. Medical schools are all teaching methods of sanitation and women in their clubs are investigating the best methods of preservation of food.

All these educational promoters are using their best endeavor, best thought and greatest energy to protect the public health and appetite, and as all food yearly consumed by the general public, especially in cities, is manipulated and furnished by retail grocers, great attention is being given to the proper cleanliness and sanitary conditions of stores and the general public is even going beyond that, by requiring that modern scientific sanitary appliances for the preservation and protection of the food supply, be placed in grocery stores.

The lined refrigerators, show cases and protected shelving patented in, clean scales and sanitary counters, raised from the floor so that they can be cleaned underneath, or what is more preferable sanitary tables, instead of counters that do not touch the floor except with their supports. All these things are being introduced and the inventive genius of the country is being exercised in order to discover and manufacture appliances that will protect the public health and appetite.

It therefore behooves the up-to-date grocer to see to it that his store is not only cleanly and kept in sanitary condition along these lines, but that he keep abreast of the times by adopting and bringing into use the various appliances that have proved to be desirable and attractive in the protection of the food in supply from unwholesomeness and contamination.

The trend of the times in this day and age is toward economizing by the use of machinery and mechanical appliances instead of hand labor. Inventive genius has even gone so far as to substitute machines for brains and the cash register now takes the place of an accountant and bookkeeper and the adding machine takes the place of the bill clerk, while the modern credit systems are substituted entirely for the old fashioned bookkeeping systems.

These modern conveniences have enabled the retail grocer to handle perishable goods, much more largely than he used to. The grocer has become a green grocer and fruits, vegetables, fish, poultry, meats, of every description are now handled in a department of the grocery most successfully, conveniently and profitably. The computing scale and the typewriting machine and a score or more appliances that we can mention have all been placed at the service of the retail grocer to lighten his troubles and help his profits, to establish his confidence in the honesty of his employes and to keep him promptly posted as to the progress and profit of his business.

The advocacy and enforcement of the pure food laws is having the effect to cause the retail grocer to read, study and think about the importance of his mission in the distribution of food products. The publicity that has been given the subject of pure and wholesome foods has brought to the retail grocer an appreciation of his own importance to the community and the responsibility which rests upon him as a censor to the public appetite.

He is enjoying the increased respect, confidence and appreciation which his co-operation with the general public in this particular is bringing him and he is also enjoying the increased profits, which his progressive and enterprising methods in adopting and applying modern improvements and inventions in his business are producing for him. He is no longer the slave, the drudge of long hours and hard laborious detail work, for his labors have been lightened by the hand and brain of modern inventive genius and his business has been bettered and up-lifted by conditions which now prevail and surround him.

COPY OF ADDRESS DELIVERED BY JAMES FOUST, DAIRY AND FOOD COMMISSIONER, BEFORE THE ASSOCIATION OF ICE CREAM MANUFACTURERS OF PENNSYLVANIA, AT ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., OCTOBER 7TH, 1914.

Mr. President and Members of the Association of Ice Cream Manufacturers of Pennsylvania:—

It gives me great pleasure to address a body of men who have added so greatly to the sum of human happiness. The well-known grange song expresses the truth. "The Farmer Feeds Them All." There should be a companion song. "The Ice Cream Man Brings Joy to All." The face of the man who sits down after a hard days work to his meal whether it be of beef and potatoes or of game and truffles, displays, it is true, a certain kind of satisfaction; but it lacks the peculiar joy that lights up the countenance of the children about the ice cream cone man, of the boys and girls partaking of their 'sundaes,' and of the sweet belles of the land to whom their beaux suggested the ice cream parlor.

It is curious, and a mark of the material evidence of this age, that what was, not so long ago, a dainty devised to stir the cloyed appetite of a king, is become an almost every day delight of the common man's home, and from Seattle to Key West, San Diego (Dee-a-go) to Eastport, is everywhere welcome, and from Christmas to the glorious Fourth and on again to Christmas.

It is said that a new and very melancholy patient having asked the advise of a celebrated Paris specialist, was told to forget himself and his cares by going to hear the most famous comedian of the day. "Alas," said the patient, "I am he."

It may be that, joy givers though you are, you ice cream men also have your troubles.

The supply of your main raw material is properly a matter for concern. Your business has grown from an output of 50,000,000 gallons, not so long ago, to a present figure of 120,000,000 gallons. The population of the country has steadily increased, and with this growth has come a corresponding increase in the general uses of milk. On the other hand, the number of dairy cows has stood still; their individual producing capacity has probably improved somewhat, but not enough to keep supply up to demand. The cost of milk production has gone strictly upward—grain foods, labor, farm equipment, and even the cow, herself, to-day costs the farmer much more than she did twenty years ago.

So the dairy farmer, too, has his troubles. You need his product. Share his troubles, co-operate with him and steady his courage in his enterprise. By so doing you will best help yourselves.

Valuable as ice cream is from the purely nutritive point of view, it is chiefly regarded as a delicate dessert. It is an artistic dainty. The essence of fine flavor, smoothness, richness and coolness which its name calls up in the mind are accompanied also by those of choiceness of materials and of absolute cleanliness and nicety in manufacture.

I do not doubt that you properly estimate the importance of those ideas of sanitation in the minds of your customers, nor that men of enterprise enough to conduct this Association are duly careful as to this feature in the conduct of your manufacturing and vending operations. The buying public does not, however, know what goes on behind the scenes. The bad practices of numerous small makers, especially those of foreign ideas as to cleanliness, are, when described, thought to be more general than is the fact. Your problem is to preserve for your wares the high repute and absolute confidence their excellence merits. My problem, as Dairy and Food Commissioner, is to see that the public gets the food it asks and pays for, and gets it in a clean, sound state. We both are interested, therefore, in the problem of the hokey-pokey man, his fellows and their ways. The problem is, in this instance, not so largely one of composition, as it is a sanitary question; although both factors require consideration. As to composition, our present ice cream law enables me to guard the interest of the public and of the maker of standard product; but it gives me no power to deal efficiently with the sanitary question.

Allow me to renew my suggestion that a law is needed placing reasonable sanitation requirements upon the manufacture of ice cream, ices and the like; and that, for its efficient enforcement, it should include a license requirement with a minimum fee so small as not to prevent the poor widow from using her clean, best room as an ice cream parlor; say a fee of five dollars per year; and possibly a maximum of ten dollars for vendors and manufacturers of large business. The idea being to keep the fee down to the level of reasonable sanitary inspection cost, and to see that factories and salesrooms are made clean before the business is begun and kept clean so long as it goes on.

We can help each other in this matter. I will welcome your counsel and co-operation.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

One reason given for the continued rise in the price of beef is that the great herds of cattle in Mexico have all been slaughtered to feed the armies, or sold to raise money to replenish the war chests.

According to reports from all sections the use of the parcel post to carry the products of the farm to the consumer is becoming common. Many hundred of urban housekeepers are getting the butter, eggs, poultry, fruit, vegetables in that way. The products are delivered fresh and at lower cost than they can be obtained at in city markets.

In the dairies of Holland the most minute care is exercised in order to obtain a product having the lowest possible bacteria count.

All the precautions taken in the best of American dairies are followed, as well as some others, which are overlooked in this country. The attendants are required to undergo frequent medical examination to assure their being quite healthy, and are required to wear clothing especially provided for their use when working around the cattle. Sterilized water is provided for washing their hands and boiled water and boracic acid are used for washing the hand parts and udder of the cows. The milking is done in a special room which is kept scrupulously clean and all receptacles are sterilized before and after use.

It is said that Manhattan, Kan., has the most rigid regulation in regard to serving milk at hotels, restaurants and boarding houses of any city in the United States. If milk is served from which part or all the cream has been taken placards must be posted reading: "We serve skimmed milk here."

Grocers' Magazine:—Two wait-on-yourself stores, one a general store in Oklahoma, the other a grocery store in Michigan, have made their appearance. All the articles of merchandise are marked in plain figures. Customers wait on themselves, taking the articles purchased to the cashier's desk, where change is made and the goods wrapped up. In the Oklahoma store a manager, a floor walker and a cashier are said to be all the help. Leader prices are the inducements to draw trade. A grocery store of considerable size in Indiana, which was to some degree conducted on the same plan a number of years ago, did not succeed although it secured a great amount of free advertising. Both the wait-on-yourself stores confine their sales to cash.

Latest statistics published by the Department of Commerce, show that during the calendar year of 1913 the United States imported 13,401,316 pounds of chicle, valued at $5,119,500. The word "chicle" according to the pamplet on Mexico recently issued by the Pan-American union at Washington is of Aztec origin and is the name given to the sap of the sapote tree. It is this sap which is the basis of practically all the chewing gum used in the United States. When this gum reaches the United States it is boiled to a required consistency, and flavoring extracts are added with the required amount of sugar. It is estimated that 300,000,000 packages of gum are sold annually in the United States, containing an average of five pieces.

The value of whey as a beverage with curative properties in diseases caused by imperfect metabolism, as gout, uric acid, etc., has long been known, but its popularity has been impaired by the uninviting yellow appearance, a more or less unpleasant cheesy odor, and its great instability. A process of purification has been patented in Germany that does not impair its nutritive or remedial properties. Whey and other creamery residues are sterilized with hydrochloric or sulphuric acid and freed of color and odor by charcoal and filtration.

Dairy students of the Ohio Agricultural College assist in turning out each year more than 70,000 quarts of milk and 30,000 pounds of butter, the value of which amounts to nearly $20,000.

Dairying is to be taught in the public schools of Yamhill county, Oregon.

As an incentive to the cattle breeders of Illinois to maintain a high standard of cattle excellence, the state live stock commission proposes to issue a certificate of merit to those who will keep a dairy herd worthy of credit.

Inspection of dairy cattle by the Missouri Pure Food Department, which was begun the first of the year, is said to have eliminated nearly every tubercular cow from the herds that supply Kansas City with milk. The department tagged as free from tuberculosis 9,700 cows, only eighty being infected. These were killed and their owners reimbursed by the State.

The president of the Los Angeles Creamery Company said recently that 10,000 pounds of skim milk, for which no use was found, was turned into the sewer daily. It might serve a useful purpose were it turned into some charitable channel.

According to the United States Department of Agriculture dairymen, grocers and restaurant keepers who sell milk at retail often violate the laws regulating the sale of milk by unintentionally selling skimmed milk. If the milk is not thoroughly mixed before pouring from a large container into a smaller one, most of the cream which naturally rises to the top, will be poured into the first receptacle which is filled. The last milk which is poured out is actually skimmed milk, for it contains little or no cream. The same trouble occurs when milk is drawn from a faucet, except that in this case the process is reversed, as the skimmed milk is drawn from the bottom of the can first and the cream layer remains to the last.

Three thousand specimens of the "dasheen" have been planted on the grounds of the Panama-Pacific exposition for decorative purposes and to demonstrate the new food product. The "dasheen" has been called the brother of the potato and it is closely related to the "poi" the native dish of the Hawaiian Islands. Its tubers are like potatoes, its shoots have the flavor of mushrooms, and its greens make a dish corresponding to spinach, so the ultimate vogue of the "dasheen" is probable.

The United States Department of Agriculture, the Kansas Agricultural College and the Santa Fe Railway ran a special egg and poultry refrigerator car through the State of Kansas and gave instructions to farmers that will enable them to get thousands of dollars more by giving more attention to the proper care of poultry and eggs.

A big cheese always draws attention and is a good advertisement for both the individual manufacturer and the industry. A Wisconsin firm has for several years made a few big cheese for some of their customers and this year made six, two each weighing 2,100 pounds. It required 100,000 pounds of milk to make the six cheese.

More than 1,000,000 short weight berry baskets have been confiscated and destroyed by State inspectors of weights and measures in Ohio this year. The baskets destroyed contained but seven-eighths of a quart. Under the Ohio law berries must be sold by dry measure and not by weight and the department has succeeded in persuading Ohio basket makers to make baskets of the capacity prescribed by law.

For centuries it has been the recognized right of any purchaser of butter to sample the goods. Once upon a time it was good form to sample with a prying forefinger. More recently custom yielded to the demands of the fastidious and the "butter sampler" became established. Now the sampler must go. At a meeting of the Clean Food club of Chicago and the food and markets committee of the Woman's City club a movement for individual sampling devices was begun.

A writer in the Kansas City Star suggests that the public does not pay enough attention to the way in which flour, sugar and other things are packed and handled. The writer makes the point that foods which cannot be washed or cleansed before using should be bought only in packages that are impervious to dust and germs. Manufacturers of such products might adopt the suggestion with profit to themselves and benefit to the health of the consuming public.

At a recent auction sale in Chicago a bull calf three months old was "knocked down" for $20,000. The calf is of the Holstein breed and is a descendant of one of the most productive families of that breed in the world. He is the son of Illinois and is called King Segis Pontiac Chicago. The mother, Johanna De Kol Van Beers, holds the world's record among Holstein cattle for butter produced in 120 days, the amount totaling 541 pounds. Her milk record for the same period is 10,498 pounds.

By a recent opinion of the United States Department of Agriculture, all fruit juices to which alcohol has been added must be plainly labeled to show this if they are to be shipped in interstate commerce, after September 1, 1914. In the opinion of the department such names as "Peach Juice" and "Cherry Juice" should be applied only to fruit juices which are unfermented and which contain no added sugar, alcohol or other substances. In the past alcohol has been frequently added as a preservative to these preparations which are used for such purposes as flavoring beverages or preparing cordials. After September 1, however, goods that do not comply with the new ruling and indicate this fact on their labels will be denied entry into this country and if found in interstate commerce will be subject to appropriate action by the authorities.

The frequency of conviction for improper labeling of flavoring extracts for non-compliance with established standards, makes one tired when he tries to read them. It costs the manufacturers from $10 to $50 for each offense, which is an expensive form of amusement.

A dairy journal remarks that there are several sides to the dairy question. Almost always we think of the side that relates to the dollar and cents we expect to get out of the business now, forgetting that there is a far more important way of looking at it. The man who has a large number of cows enjoys the satisfaction of knowing that he is not skinning his farm. Every year he is putting back a good deal of the fertility he takes out of his land in the form of manure, grass and soiling crops. This is not the case with the man who raises grain exclusively, keeping little if any stock and selling his farm bare year after year until it produces little or nothing.

The fish industry of Alaska is equal to the gold output, according to latest statistics. It is stated that the money value each year is likely to become approximately equal to the money value of the gold mined each year. In 1912 the money value of the gold mined and the money value of the fisheries were almost exactly even, the fisheries exceeding the gold in money value by about $150,000. From this it will be seen that the United States made no mistake when she got possession of Alaska, and the beauty part of it is, that long after the gold mines have been depleted, we will still have our fisheries, if properly conserved, and from present indications it appears that the government intends to conserve its fisheries resources, not only in Alaska, but all along our coasts.

At the recent meeting the federal, state and municipal sanitation experts and home economics conference of the General Federation of Women's clubs united in urging their 1,000 woman auditors to keep up the fight for pure food. Dr. Henry E. Burnard, State Food Commissioner of Indiana said:—"It is impossible to put enough federal, state or municipal food inspectors into the field to insure clean food for our people unless they have the constant, active support of the women of the country. It is impractical for centralized food control to inspect the hundreds of thousands of dairies from which our milk comes as it is for the government to inspect your kitchens.

SOME LEGISLATIVE TENDENCIES.

Herewith the Bulletin takes pleasure in presenting to its readers the address delivered by Charles Wesley Dun, Counsel, at the banquet given by the Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representative to the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association, held at Philadelphia, November 19, 1914:

Mr. Toastmaster, distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen: I would like to direct your attention for a very few moments to the subject of some legislative tendencies.

There is an interesting story told of General Ben Butler, when the General was serving as Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. On entering the capitol one morning he saw two lawyers in earnest disputation on the capitol steps and he inquired as to the point in issue—

"We'll leave the question to you, Governor," they both exclaimed. "We are disputing as to who is the greatest lawyer in Massachusetts."

"I am," promptly replied Ben Butler.

The lawyers looked non-plussed for a moment and then one ventured to ask—

"But how can you prove it, Governor?"

In answering the Governor fell back upon his knowledge of the law and said with great dignity and impressiveness,

"Sir, I do not have to prove it, I admit it," and then passed along.

This little anecdote illustrates, quite well, a conception in the minds of many of the attitude often taken by the law maker. A law is proposed and when an inquiry is made as to the reason for such a law, the answer is—"Sir, I do not have to prove the need for this law, I admit it."

The legislative tendency to which I would direct your attention is—the extraordinary tendency to intimately regulate private conduct by written law, to set up a statutory rule of thumb, confining, controlling and limiting personal liberty, in a manner sometimes necessary, but, sometimes, also, ill-considered, impracticable, unduly oppressive, and, again, absurd. A poet has written that

"Law's the wisdom of all ages."

This definition when applied to some legislative tendencies would need considerable revision.

Many thoroughly economically sound and efficient commercial laws have been enacted which have conferred lasting benefits upon this Nation. And it is not to such legislative pronouncements that we refer, for example, in our opinion the pure food and drug laws are based upon the soundest possible economic and public welfare considerations.

There used to be an idea, fairly generally held, that personal liberty of action was sacred and inviolable, incorporated in our Bill of Rights, to be enjoyed so long as the equal rights of others were not interfered with. That all legislation sprang from public need, thoughtfully matured and exactly defined, relating to acts and things affected with a direct public interest. It must be admitted that the liberties so enjoyed have been, on occasion, abused, that certain broad or narrow limitations by law have been found essential in the public interest. It will be conceded, also, I believe, that practices have grown and flourished in the dark of commercial dealings which were distinctly harmful to commerce, and generally condemned, but against which the individual was powerless to act, calling for external and arbitrary regulation.

It is interesting to note that wasteful and inefficient conditions called into being the voluntary trade Associations, enabling the elimination by cooperation of certain particularly hurtful abuses, endured by the individual without the ability to provide a remedy. This correction of many commercial evils to which association work is directed could hardly be considered as within the domain of public legislation, but rather within the domain of fair and efficient dealing. And it is interesting to note, further, that the development of such trade association cooperation has been coincident with the development of the regulation of commerce by legislation—indicating that the merchants of this country are lending every assistance, voluntarily, in the elimination of wrongful and harmful practices.

But these processes of correction, whether legislative, commercial or social, in our complex present-day manner of living and doing business, must be developed slowly and surely—so that we may not, in our best of intentions, over-run the mark and do more injury than good.

Take for example, the trade association work. The American Trade Associations represent a most significant economic movement, and their work during the past few years has done more, we believe, to bring about a sane, fair and efficient conduct of business, has done more to instill a clearer recognition of the distinction between individual and public rights and obligations, has done more to humanize the conduct of business than any other single force. But because of the blessings bestowed by association work, the value of which is incalculable, we must be all the more careful and conservative, so that these blessings may be preserved, and not destroyed or made impossible by the abuse of these privileges.

And so in the case of reforming business or society by legislation, we must move with the utmost care, deliberation and sureness. Every year ten thousands of bills are introduced in various legislatures and thousands of laws are enacted. The legislative mill is working faster each year, it seems. Such a comprehensive scheme of regulation has been worked out, that every operation of a factory from the time it first opens for business until it closes, every operation and act from the purchase of the raw material until the delivery of the finished product to the consumer, is prescribed, defined and limited by some law. The regulation would be complete if profits were guaranteed. This multiplicity of regulation, this vast labyrinth of prohibition and restriction through which business must feel its way practically necessitates the constant employment of legal counsel to advise as to every step. But the most difficult part of this regulation is, often, the absolute impossibility of exact compliance, even with the best of intent, either because of the impracticability of the regulation, its uncertainty, or the conflict therein. It has been stated that if all the food and drug laws of this country were exactly and strictly enforced, there would be few manufacturers or dealers engaged in a national business who would not be contesting prosecution in the courts.

The great body of business men in this country are law-abiding and honorable men and citizens. The constant worry of complying with a complex mass of drastic and often ill-considered legislation, difficult to interpret and impossible in practice to comply with, enforcing arbitrary conditions contrary to the underlying economic principles, cannot but have a certain depressing effect. It is indeed true that business is sensitive and this worry instills a feeling of insecurity. This feeling of insecurity becomes serious, for large capital or all capital may be in issue, the business of a generation or of a lifetime and a good name, may be in issue, and many may be dependent upon its prosperity. One might just as well argue with a child against the natural fear of a "bogy-man" as to remove the characteristic of sensitiveness from business.

It is not necessary to dwell upon the expense which needless legislative regulation entails, which expense usually falls upon the innocent and those who can ill-afford to stand it.

But the notion is somewhat prevalent that laws may be used to make business, unsuccessful because of unsound conditions, prosperous, to regulate the profits of an independent and fairly conducted private business, to remove powerful competitors whose sin is their success, to settle a hundred and one personal questions, which have always heretofore been settled upon the field of open and fair competition. Because we have learned that it is necessary to declare unfair competition illegal, it does not follow that fair trade must be forcibly dressed in an approved garment. And then, again, fashions have a way of changing.

The United States is a commercial nation, destined to be the greatest commercial nation the world has ever known. Our resources are almost boundless, our commercial ability and courage commensurate, and our opportunities loom large before us. We can only achieve the highest degree of national prosperity, welfare and happiness when commerce perfectly developed best serves the interests of all concerned, when its flow is full, straight and true, along a bed of real commercial democracy, free from obstructions carelessly, thoughtlessly, or needlessly placed. And the Nation which protects and encourages the legitimate interests of its commerce and makes possible untrammeled opportunity for all engaged in such commerce, best serves its own interests.

May I quote, in conclusion, a short poem by Walt Mason which expresses very neatly and forcibly the point I have endeavored to make:

EL DORADO.

There is a land of pure delight
  Remote from vulgar storms,
Where people stay up day and night,
  Inventing new reforms.
The natives have no feet or hands,
  They all have run to jaws;
Because their blessed isle demands,
  No other thing than laws.

They nothing do but legislate
  And frame new laws each day,
And no one has to pay the freight;
  There is no freight to pay.
There talksmiths aye are in the van,
  And lawyers are in swarms,
And he is held the greatest man
  Who springs the most reforms.

There no one plows and no one saws
  Or wields the toilers' traps,
Because they all are making laws
  To govern t'other chaps.
No smoke from factory or mill
  Is seen upon the breeze;
Reformers come along and kill
  Such industries as these.

If any fellow strains and racks
  His form to gain a roll,
They hit him with an income tax
  And put him in the hole.
"You have," they say, "no earthly right
  To money you have earned,
And to the lawyers, foolish wight,
  It all must be returned."

"For what you call prosperity
  We don't care seven straws,
There's always sin where such things be,
  And all we need is laws,"
And so beneath their uplift flags,
  They argue, rant and rail;
One-half the population drags
  The other half to jail.

OLEOMARGARINE LICENSES.

Authority of the Dairy and Food Commissioner to Transfer Same.

The following opinion transmitted to Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust by Second Deputy Attorney General Wm. M. Hargest will prove interesting to dealers in oleomargarine as well as to the general public:

Office of the Attorney General, Harrisburg, November 11, 1914.

Hon. James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner, Harrisburg, Pa.

Sir: You have transmitted to this Department the letter of Joseph R. Shearer to you, enclosing copies of other communications passing between your Department and Mr. Shearer, and have asked to be advised concerning the transfer of the oleomargarine license of Mr. Shearer.

As I gather from the correspondence, Joseph R. Shearer holds a license for the sale of uncolored oleomargarine at retail, from a store in Chester, Pa. He desires to move his business and to have the license transferred so that he may have the right to sell uncolored oleomargarine at retail from a store in Wayne, Pa.

The Act of Assembly regulating the sale of oleomargarine, approved May 29, 1901, P. L. 327, provides that no person, firm or corporation shall sell uncolored oleomargarine without first having obtained a license authorizing the holder of said license to engage in the sale of uncolored oleomargarine, and provides that application for such license shall be made in such form as shall be prescribed by the Dairy and Food Commissioner, which application,

> "in addition to other matters which may be required to be stated therein by the Dairy and Food Commissioner, shall contain an accurate description of the place where the proposed business is to be carried on, and the name and style under which it is proposed to conduct the said business. If the said application is satisfactory to the said Dairy and Food Commissioner, and the name and style shall not, in the judgment of the Dairy and Food Commissioner, be calculated to deceive or mislead the public as to the real nature of the business so proposed to be carried on, he shall issue to the applicant or applicants a license authorizing him, her or them to engage in the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine or of similar substance which shall not contain a coloration or ingredient that causes it to resemble yellow butter."

The Act of Assembly also provides that such license shall not authorize the sale at any other place than that designated in the application and license, but that

> "Such license may be transferred by the Dairy and Food Commissioner upon the application, in writing, of the person, firm or corporation to which the same has been granted."

The authority to transfer is vested in the Dairy and Food Commissioner upon a proper application. If Joseph R. Shearer makes an application for the transfer of the license now held by him from Chester, Delaware County, to a place in Wayne, Delaware County, and the place to which the license is to be transferred is satisfactory to the Dairy and Food Commissioner, the Dairy and Food Commissioner has power under the provisions of the law just quoted, to make such transfer.

Very truly yours,

Wm. M. Hargest,
Second Deputy Attorney General.

An address delivered by James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner, before the Association of American Specialty Manufacturers, Bellevue-Stratford. Philadelphia, Pa., November 19th, 1914.

Mr. President and gentlemen of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association: The managers of your program have asked me to talk to you upon the subject, "The Relation between Food Manufacturers and Food Commissioners."

This theme was so ably handled by your representative and others at the recent meeting in Portland, that I feel it unnecessary to treat the subject upon all its more important sides. To speak briefly and quite informally upon a few points is all that I shall attempt.

The responsibility of the food manufacturer is as large as his power of service to the people. Under the law, he is free to make any food he can, only so that it is wholesome and is sold for what it is and in the amount declared. He has also the greatest opportunity to act as adulterator, and he knows best what the label must contain to be true. But all know that an honest brand doesn't insure an honest sale and that, if the manufacturer himself is deceived in his raw materials, his wares may suffer without bad intent on his part. What is not so well understood is the fact that the public itself, has too long allowed loose ideas of "commercial right" to spread unhindered, or has merely shrugged its shoulders. Under the rule of such ideas, competition had pure honesty by the throat. Now it is hard for some insurance men, brokers and railroad directors, let us say, to understand why they should be suddenly frowned upon. Though they may have worked great harm, the blame is not all theirs.

That your Association realizes its responsibilities and the force of present public opinion, your own spokesmen have made so clear that I have no need to preach to you from that text. You have yourselves lifted up a fair banner in the cause of business morality.

The other party to the relationship named in my subject is the Food Commissioner. About him I know even more than I do about the manufacturer. I have heard that the food manufacturer sometimes has trouble with the food laws. So does the commissioner. As his name suggests, he holds a commission, but it is not a "roving" one. He is bounded on the one part of the circle by the law and on the other by his oath to enforce it as it stands. He doesn't make the law, though he is sometimes asked for suggestions while it is a-making. But you all know that free advice is mostly received, but not taken; a harvest fifty per cent. true to seed is a very good crop from the sowing. Just one little word, well placed, may do as much work as a whole repealing paragraph; or it may make a blunderbuss of the legal gun so that the bystander is hit just as often as the enemy for whom the shot was intended; but the commissioner is under oath to shoot with that gun and to keep at it until he is given a better one.

But I am told that the commissioner should certainly have some executive descretion. Possibly; but under the present setting of the screws of public opinion and judicial decision, that spring doesn't have much chance to work. Too much ought not to be expected of it, under the circumstances. I have known men to commit official suicide in trying to use it—they were called traitors; gave away their power to influence public judgment and gained nothing for any one. Where more latitude is allowed, of course the power should be so used as best to serve the public good.

The commissioner has, it is true, the first responsibility for interpreting the law. If its wording leaves a doubt, he can give either the public or the vendor the benefit of that doubt. But even in such case, where the meaning is brought into question in its bearing upon a matter of importance, his duty is to give that benefit to the public. Otherwise, with laws and the organization of the public business as they now stand, the people's side cannot get before the court.

But, it is urged, the commissioner ought to be constructive, not purely destructive, in his attitude. That depends upon what is before him. His attitude ought, as every one's ought, to be helpful for the betterment of the conditions with which his office deals. I said "attitude;" I didn't say "acts." He may not use public agencies, nor public funds for purposes not covered by his authorization. It may, for some purposes, be wise to broaden the authorization, so that public agencies may aid the food maker to get out of some of the manufacturing difficulties which new public demands have gotten him into. I shall not go farther into this interesting subject, but may I hint that, even from the manufacturer's point of view, there are arguments against as well as for the giving of such public aid.

If in this brief sketch of the Food Commissioner's field of action, I have seemed to make of him a merely mechanical device in the machinery of the public service, that is not my desire. I could only sketch, not fill in my part of the picture; and many heavy lines have been drawn in the other part.

I have spoken of the manufacturer and of the commissioner. It is high time to say something directly about the relation. Will you pardon me if I put the commissioner's business in homely words?

It is his privilege to encourage the food manufacturers and dealers to behave, and within the limits of his authority, to help them behave; but it is his duty to see whether or not they are behaving, and if he finds some are not, to take these to the courts for judgment and the application of the remedies prescribed.

This matter of behaving or not behaving is very largely a question of fact, sometimes of many facts. The commissioner's door ought to be wide open to the manufacturers who come with facts; in view, however, of his public responsibility, he should not be thought impolite if he keeps the door wide open while they are with him. It is hard enough to be always fair; it is even harder to seem always fair. But when you want to bring me facts, bring them yourselves; don't send a lawyer, eloquent and forceful though he may be, but who knows even less about the important facts than I do.

May I add a"don't?" Don't mistake the commissioner for the court. In my locality, they have not only separate offices, but separate duties.

Now I hope that from this rough sketch I have drawn, you will see clearly that I believe that the efforts of the honest manufacturers and dealers can be most helpful to the food commissioner and the cause he serves; indeed, that exchange of facts between them and him, either directly or through his expert advisers, is important to the highest efficiency of his service.

I am glad to be in position to say that the influence of high-purposed manufacturers' organizations has already done much to reduce food trade abuses. Of the prosecutions brought within recent times in Pennsylvania for food law violations, only 15 per cent. represent inter-state traffic—that is, the largest, most highly organized producing interest.

There is one point in your "object of organization" upon which I will venture to touch; that is, Uniformity of food laws. Uniformity is certainly desirable; efficiency is even more desirable. If you mean, secure somehow the best law possible and bring the laws of the other states or of the United States up to that, that is one thing. If you mean, secure uniformity everywhere, and then oppose improvement anywhere unless it can be had everywhere at the same time, that is a very different thing. Even if you and I came to full agreement upon what law would be desirable, the probability that all the State and National legislators would agree with us, is very distant. You remember the old Quaker who exclaimed to his wife, "Betsy, everybody is queer but thee and me; and sometimes I think thee is a little queer." The old Quaker may not have had many blood relations, but his mental brethern are at least the majority of the country's legislators.

The co-operation of the honest and enlightened manufacturers and dealers, and of the public press, with the food commissioner has driven most of the grosser forms of adulteration from our foods. Their sanitary production and handling is fast coming to be regarded as even more important. While the laws committed to me for enforcement contain little that is specific upon food sanitation, I desire to use this opportunity to express my sense of its very high importance.

I fear I am consuming more than my share of your time. Allow me, in closing, to say how greatly I appreciate this opportunity of meeting you, of getting into touch with your methods of co-operation, and of addressing you upon some of the many matters in which we are all interested.

WHAT MAKES MILK AND BUTTER YELLOW?

Recent experiments carried on by the United States Department of Agriculture have demonstrated that the rich yellow color demanded by the public in dairy products is due to the character of the cow's feed. The experiments were carried on in co-operation with the Missouri State Experiment station. This question has been studied for many years by dairy experts. Their conclusion is that, although to some extent a breed characteristic, the intensity of the yellow color may, within certain limits, be increased or diminished at will by changing the animal's rations.

Chemical tests show that the yellow pigmant in milk consists of several well known pigments found in green plants. Of these the principal one is carotin, so called because it constitutes a large part of the coloring matter of carrots. The other yellow pigmants in the milk are known as xanthopylis. These are found in a number of plants including grass, but are especially abundant in yellow autumn leaves.

These pigments pass directly from the feed into the milk. This explains the well known fact that fresh green grass and carrots increase the yellowness of butter, the only standard by which the average person judges its richness. On the other hand, a large proportion of these pigments is deposited in the body fat and elsewhere in the cow. When the ration is changed to one containing fewer coloring constituents, this boarded store is gradually drawn upon and in consequence the yellowness of the milk does not decrease so rapidly as it otherwise would. This yellowness increases, however, the instant the necessary plant pigments are restored to the ration.

Green grass is probably richer in carotin than any other dairy feed. Cows fed on it will, therefore, produce the highest colored butter. Green corn, in which xanthophyll constitute the chief pigment, will also produce a highly colored product. On the other hand a ration of bleached clover hay and yellow corn is practically devoid of yellow pigments and the milk from cows fed upon it will gradually lose its color. It is, of course, indisputably true that the breed does influence the color of the milk fat, but vary the ration and there will be a corresponding variation in the color of the milk fat in each breed.

THE MILK COOLER A NECESSITY.

According to The Milk Dealer many thousands of dollars are lost every year by milk dealers through sour milk. The greatest loss, however, is lost patronage which results from sour or tainted milk and is a permanent loss.

Milk does not necessarily need to be sour to be spoiled but can very easily be spoiled by being placed in cans and covering up without giving the animal heat a chance to escape, which results in its becoming tainted and allows various fermentations to take place.

The necessity for the use of a good milk cooler in the farmers' hands has been appreciated by a few large concerns who have furnished their shippers with coolers. However the majority of the dealers do not appreciate it sufficiently, if one can judge by the temperature of the milk accepted by some of them.

Too often the farmer thinks so long as he has plenty of cold water and sets the cans of milk in this he is doing all that is necessary. The United States Department of Agriculture recently made some experiments in cooling milk in cans. They found out that the milk above the water level remained from 5 to 6 degrees warmer than the portion below the level. It is very clear to anyone that the bacteria growth would naturally increase very fast in the top milk, and when this was mixed with the other it increased the bacteria growth in the whole lot and caused the milk to sour rapidly. The experiments show that even if the milk was stirred, it reqnired three hours to reduce the temperature from 90 degrees to 60 degrees, while milk that was not stirred required over four hours to cool to 60 degrees. The tests proved that this method of cooling required too much time for good results and served to emphasize the necessity for using a good milk cooler.

As a rule spring water will run around 50 degrees in summer, and by circulating this through a cooler the temperature of the milk can be reduced to the same temperature as the water and in such case no ice is needed. The cooling takes place as soon as a pail of milk has been milked and before the bacteria have had a chance to multiply the temperature is reduced to a point where their increase is very slow. The rapid growth of bacteria in warm milk shows how important it is to cool milk quickly, and also shows what a big mistake is made by many dairymen who think as long as the milk is cool enough by shipping time they have done their part even if it did take several hours to cool.

FISH AS A SUPPLEMENT TO MEAT.

That the meat supply of the world is entirely inadequate to the demands is a statement which admits of no argument. For several years past there has been a steady advance in meat prices in this and other countries, and all of the agitation of the question and volumes which have been written upon it have failed in making any impression on the facts. The feeling against packers voiced by consumers has been acute and ready to flare up in new denunciations and charges with slight provocation.

When one considers the enormous production of meat in the United States it would seem that there would be sufficient for all at reasonable prices; but when we place over against production the still more enormous demand, increased cost is a most natural sequence.

It is undeniably true that the American people as a whole eat more meat than they need, and in spite of the cost refuse to cultivate a taste for other foods, the elements of which are the same or produce the same results in flesh and energy as do meats.

It is useless to investigate and legislate against rising food prices when supply and demand are so at variance as in the case of meats. The thing to do is to adopt the philosophy of "One Simple John Tompkins," as illustrated in his cheerful remark:

> "For why should I grumble and murmer, he said;
> If I cannot get meat I can surely get bread."

There is no dearth of food in this country. The difficulty is that everyone wants to eat the same kinds of foods. We as a people have not taken kindly to cheese, although we consume more now than formerly. And the same is true as to fish. Yet both of these classes of food can be utilized so as to almost completely take the place of meat in a well balanced diet.

The first publication of The United States Department of Agriculture in connection with its investigations of fish and fish products has just been made. It is entitled "Supplementing Our Food Supply With Fish," and is from the pen of M. E. Pennington, chief of the food research laboratory, in Philadelphia, of the Bureau of Chemistry. Dr. Pennington begins by reminding us that "Meat shortage was an old problem to other nations when our nation was in its infancy," a simple statement that may be "news" to some of those who are so vigorously discussing the "unprecedented" condition existing at the present time.

Calling attention to the popular but erroneous belief entertained by so many of our people that fish do not furnish us with as high grade material as beef, Dr. Pennington presents the following table, which indicates an encouraging similarity in protein content:

Kind of meat.	per cent. of protein.
Beef, loin, medium,	17.9
Beef, ribs,	17.0
Beef, round, medium,	19.7
Leg of mutton,	17.9
Neck of mutton,	16.4
Loin pork chops,	16.1
Ham,	14.8

Kind of fish.	per cent. of protein.
Black bass,	20.0
Bluefish,	18.8
Cod steaks,	18.1
Flounder, whole,	13.8
Haddock,	16.7
Halibut steak,	18.0
Lake trout,	17.3
Mackerel,	18.1
Weakfish,	17.3
Whitefish,	22.2

European countries have given practical encouragement to their fish industries, and to the education of the people to the value of fish as food. This has greatly stimulated consumption and increased output. As a matter of fact, on the whole it is the foreign-born population of the United States who constitute the large proportion of fish eaters in this country.

One of the reasons why the American people are not more appreciative of fish is the lack of ability on the part of the American housewife to properly cook the food. Touching upon this subject Dr. Pennington says:

"The person who has enjoyed the appetizing and satisfying fish served so universally in Europe, or even in New Orleans, finds a woeful lack of ability on the part of the American cook to utilize to the best advantage even the high-class fish, and a hopeless incompetence when the less desirable varieties are used. The many attractive sauces that add flavor and piquancy are unknown. The many accessory dishes such as salads, croquettes, pates, ets, that may be made from fish are never considered. A very great gain would accrue to this nation if some agency would follow the example of Germany and institute classes in the art of cooking fish."

After considering the subject from all its favorable aspects, and calling attention to the necessity for eating more fish, there is one very important phase of the matter which vitally affects the prospects of the fish industry in this country. It is found in this single sentence from the report:

"For uncertainty of harvest, however, fishing exceeds even the most unreliable crops with which agriculture has to deal." When all is said and done, food production is very largely a commercial proposition. No one cares to lend their efforts to engage in any industry that does not "pay." And to be candid we can't blame them. If it were only a matter of educating the body of consumers to the value and palatibleness of fish as food, the task would not be so difficult. But when coupled with the fact that the industry is disastrously unprofitable to those engaged in it and for natural causes over which man has no control, the situation becomes more complicated.

Yet, as Dr. Pennington says in conclusion:

"Fish is now the poor man's food in the United States. To it, more than to any other nitrogen-rich product, must we look for a food supply to supplement the meat which we cannot hope to have in the future as in the past, either in price or in quantity. All food taken from the sea is a net gain to the land. This food in no way impoverishes the soil, and in fact adds to the fertilizing elements of the country. On the other hand, food raised on the land necessarily takes elements from the soil, and this tends to impoverish the fertility of our farms unless the elements withdrawn are artificially restored. This is true of every animal raised for meat purposes, although, of course, the depletion of the soil on which meat animals are fed is not so direct as when corn or some other product is raised and shipped away to be consumed in some distant section. There is, moreover, a limit as to the amount that can be produced on the land. The fish in the seas, on the other hand, feed and breed unaided and practically in unlimited numbers. Like many another of our resources, we have not yet begun to fathom the value of the fish in our waters. Only time and necessity will teach what they mean to our nation.—American Food Journal.

AGE OF MILK AS RECEIVED AT CITY PLANTS.

Ernest Kelly, in charge of Market Milk Investigations, United States Department of Agriculture in a report on the subject says:

From recent surveys of city milk plants made by the Dairy Division, figures were obtained as to the age of milk when it is received at the plant. These figures were obtained from the proprietors or managers of the principal plants in each city, and from personal observation. It was found that there was a great variation in age both with different dealers in the same city, and with different cities. The figures obtained from the different dealers in each city, showing the extremes in age are as follows: Washington, from 2 to 40 hours; Baltimore from 4 to 16 hours; Boston, from 2 to 48 hours; Philadelphia, from 4 to 41 hours; Pittsburgh, from 4 to 40 hours.

These figures show a wide variation between the oldest and the freshest milk as received at the plants in each city. The average ages would not be as old as the figures would imply because much more milk is received at the lesser ages than at the older. The oldest milk reported in Baltimore was only 16 hours when received at the plant, but the average would not be much different from that in some of the other cities. The extreme ages of 40, 41 and 48 hours as given for the oldest milk received in those cities is very unusual, generally only one dealer in each city reporting milk received at that age. Only one dealer in Boston reported that part of his supply was received as old as 48 hours. The Boston supply has the advantage of very good refrigerating accommodations during transit. Very little of the Philadelphia supply is more than 30 hours old on arrival at the plant, only one dealer reporting that a part of his supply was over this. Much of the milk in Philadelphia is delivered within a few hours after it is received at the plant.

The milk received in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Boston is on the average considerably older than that in either Washington or Baltimore. This is due to the fact that much of the milk comes from considerable distances and a large part of it goes through country receiving stations.

The refrigerating accommodations in transit to Baltimore and Washington are not so good as those for other cities making is necessary that the milk be received in a comparatively fresh state.

It is very important that the milk be properly cooled before shipment, especially where there is no refrigeration on the trains. The best way is to get the farmer to cool his milk immediately after milking; where this is not done the country cooling station has some advantage. Milk can be received at the station once or even twice a day in summer and thoroughly cooled before it is sent to the city. Then, too, any surplus can be separated or used for by-products, thus lessening the bill for transportation. Of course it is necessary to have in the vicinity enough milk to make a station practicable. Disadvantages of such a system are that part of the milk is sometimes somewhat older when it reaches the city and is handled over once more. In addition the establishment and operation of such a plant will add slightly to the cost of the milk.

POPULARIZING THE USE OF DAIRY PRODUCTS.

From The Creamery and Milk Plant Monthly:

It is not the intention of the Creamery and Milk Plant Monthly to raise extravagant hopes in the milk and milk products trade by suggesting far reaching plans for acquiring foreign fields of commerce hitherto occupied by the nations now engaged in the frightful war in Europe. To try to persuade anybody that good can come to the United States from the destruction of life and property now going on would be to talk foolishness. There is bound to be loss. But something can be done to compensate in small part for the great loss that must fall on the innocent bystander. Some producers are seeking it in foreign exports. Perhaps there is a field there for our manufacturers of dairy machinery, though the dairy industry in Latin-America is not extensive or advanced enough to hold out hope of immediate success on any great scale.

Let us not reach for a star to light a candle. There is plenty to be done at home, and the immediate effect of the great war will be greatly to enlarge the market for dairy products right here, provided the industry is ready to step in and take advantage of the opportunity. Nor will this be temporary, to drop out of sight after normal conditions shall return. Once accustom large numbers of people to use dairy foods, and they will stick to them, for they are both wholesome and cheap, and will in time seem equally toothsome.

The most direct and instant opportunity appears to loom for the cheese manufacturers. The prices of meat have been advancing for some time, and with the large quantities that are being called for in Europe, to feed the armies, it is likely there will be greater scarcity than ever. Cheese is the most obvious substitute. Yes, we know it should not be considered a substitute, but it will be so considered for a while by many. It will eventually come to stand on its own bottom, and people will stop thinking of it as a meat substitute, but for the present let us not be ashamed to call it so. The failure to get some of the fine aromatic imported cheeses will perhaps have less to do with an increased cheese consumption in this country than the higher prices of meat, because their quantity is not very great, and the lover of Camembert does not take readily to Cheddar.

It is not necessary to tell cheese manufacturers the virtues of their product. They know, or can put their hands on the information, that cheese is one of the most concentrated protein foods, that it is easily digested, provided it is properly prepared or masticated and that is it cheap. But that knowledge will help little to broaden the market while it remains locked up in the brain of the cheese producer and the professor at the agricultural college. It is necessary to spread it broadcast among the people. With it must go directions for using cheese properly. In that field much remains to be done. Most people use cheese as a desert or other relish instead of making it one of the chief parts of the meal. On that custom largely rests the reputation of cheese for indigestibility. Cheese, pie, nuts, etc., are charged with many sins against our health, but they are not themselves to blame. It is the wrong use of them. To eat a hearty meal and top it off with a big piece of pie, or a chunk of cheese, or a handful of nuts, each of these articles being of the heartiest kind of food in itself, is simply to overload the stomach. It is the old principle that the main question is not what we eat but how we eat. There is a big field here for educational and publicity work among the people. Why should not the cheese manufacturers and dealers get together and organize a national bureau of publicity to spread the gospel of cheese?

At the same time, the manufacture of the aromatic cheeses of Europe should be extended. Most of them today are manufactured in this country in great or less resemblance of the originals, close enough in most cases to possess most of the essential properties of the originals, though the finer aromas and flavors may not be always attainable in a climate and soil different from the original. And it should be said with candor that the ordinary American or Cheddar cheese is to most people nowhere near so tempting as most of these aromatic varieties.

It is very well to talk to people about the food value of things to eat, but after all people will eat what they like. Few people indeed will weigh carefully the heat unit and protein ratios in a meal when they prepare it at home or order it at a public eating house. People will eat what they like and what custom bids. It is therefore necessary to develop the more savory cheeses in greater quantity. True, they require more care and attention, but this greater intensity of work is beginning to become more and more of a necessity in all forms of production in this country, and the sooner the cheese-makers make up their minds to it, the quicker and greater will be their profits. Next to cheese milk in the fresh and the condensed and dried states can be used in far greater measure than it is today. In this line also there is room for a vast amount of educational work among the people. Since it is possible now, by means of the various milk preparations, to have milk ready at all times for use in cooking without danger of spoiling, its use for cooking should be popularized. Education and publicity have a big field here. Then there is sour and skimmilk. Both deserve thorough study and general introduction for common use. There remain prejudices against them to be eradicated, laws to be modified, health officials to be convinced, people generally to be educated. Milk is regarded too much in the light of a food for children and a beverage for adults. It should not be treated as a beverage, but as a most substantial food for adults as well as children. Beverages are substances taken for their condimental value, or as relishes, not as substantial foods, and among them milk cannot be classified. But its use as a food is capable of great expansion.

DOES DAIRYING PAY?

From the Blue Valley Bulletin.

This is a question that often confronts the individual farmer. It is a question which is a vital one with him, especially when feed gets scarce and expensive.

Dairying with some farmers doesn't pay. They don't keep good enough cows and don't take good enough care of them, but that is poor proof that the dairy business is not a good thing for the dairy farmer.

To combat such evidence one could point out thousands of instances where individual farmers have become wealthy by breeding and feeding good dairy stock.

This is not the kind of evidence that we consider the best proof. What we consider the best answer to the question of whether dairying really does pay, is the condition of the whole community.

Go into any good agricultural community in the country where dairying has been followed for a number of years and carried on right, and you will find the best evidence in the world that dairying pays and pays well.

The writer has had the privilege of visiting many dairy communities in practically all of the dairy states and has always made it a point to make careful comparisons between conditions in those neighborhoods where the dairy cow has been appreciated and where she has not. Just the other day we had occasion to spend a day in riding among the farmers in one of the oldest dairying districts of Illinois. What we saw is, we believe, the best evidence that can be produced to answer the question at the head of this article.

We saw finely improved farms, comfortable homes and big barns. We saw one or two silos on almost every farm. In talking with the farmers we learned that in almost every case the farm was equipped with all the latest labor saving, money-making conveniences. Almost every farmer has his automobile. The homes are filled with good furniture and in many cases the grown up sons and daughters are at college. Evidence of prosperity is everywhere. The dairy cow has done it.

And she is still busy. These farmers don't quit dairying just because they can afford to. They claim that with their labor saving improvements and conveniences they would rather keep cows than to farm without them. They don't look upon farming as drudgery. They look upon it as a business proposition, returning them more money upon their investment than any other branch of farming.

Not all of these farmers have pure bred animals. In fact, a majority of them do not but they have good cows. They know that they cannot afford to keep any other kind. Then they take good care of them. That is the secret of their making dairying pay.

There are many communities in the middle west where land is just as good where conditions might now be similar to those we have described had the dairy cow been appreciated.

The farmer in the newer section who is wondering about the future of his community, should profit from the experience of other communities. He can not only make dairying pay for himself but he can perhaps be instrumental in getting his neighbors to give more attention to the dairy cow. The ultimate result will be a prosperous community. Does dairying pay? That depends upon the man and the cow.

IN STRAUS BABIES TRUST.

September marked the close of the twenty-third year during which Nathan Straus has distributed Pasturized milk among the babies in New York. In connection with the work carried on, Miss Annie Nason, superintendent of the Nathan Straus laboratories, has compiled some interesting figures showing the extent of the distribution. Her report shows that during the last year 2,148,119 bottles of milk have been delivered and 1,747,984 glasses of milk have been sold at the stands in the parks and on the recreation piers. In the twenty-three years the output has been 37,000,000 bottles and 20,000,000 glasses.

Recent conditions have made it impossible for Mr. Straus to obtain the necessary milk supply to keep open indefinitely the stands in the parks and on the piers but a number of stations will be maintained all year.

HOW MILK BECOMES DISEASED.

Bulletin No. 602, issued by the United States Department of Agriculture among other things says:

Bacteria find their way into the milk from various sources. Some may come from the udder itself, where they grow in the milk cisterns and ducts. The greater number, however, come from the air, the dirt from the udder and flanks, from the milker and from unclean utensils. Disease producing bacteria may get into the milk from the cows having such diseases as tuberculosis, or from people who handle the milk, who may themselves have contagious diseases or who have been taking care of patients afflicted with such diseases as typhoid fever, diptheria and septic sore throat.

The consumer is sometimes responsible for the contamination of milk. Milk bottles should not be taken into a sick room, because infectious diseases can be spread by carrying infected bottles back to the dairy. If bottles are left where there are contagious diseases, they should not be collected by the milkman until they have been properly disinfected by the board of health. In the case of typhoid fever or other serious diseases which may be carried in the milk, it is better for the consumer to put out a covered dish for the milk or have it delivered to some member of the household. Until official permission has been granted no milk bottles should be removed from a home in which there is or has recently been a case of communicable disease. The consumer should not use milk bottles for holding liquids other than milk.

WHERE THEY COME FROM.

Living bodies, both great and small, are usually found in a definite place. The bacteria found in milk are indeed a mixed collection, according to recent reports from the Bureau of Animal Industry, in Washington. The fact that certain organisms are usually found in milk does not necessarily mean that they originate in the udder, but rather directs the attention to the foci of infection from which they get into the secretions of the mammary gland.

It is known, says the Journal of the American Medical Association, that while the colon group is frequently found in water and milk, its natural habitat is in the intestinal tract of the warm-blooded animals. The streptococci may gain entrance into the milk through contamination with feces, which must be considered as a possible source of contamination, the presence in a herd of one or more cows with infected udders, and the cow's mouth which is known to contain streptococci. Its habit of licking the flanks and udder provides a more or less direct connection between the mouth of the cow and the milk pail.

ELECTRIC STERILIZATION OF MILK.

The sterilization of water by means of electricity was shown to be practical a number of years ago and installations for supplying ultra-violet rays generated by electric lamps to this purpose have been applied on a large scale, particularly in Europe. The necessity for the sterilization of milk is quite as urgent as for water and this method was at once applied to the latter form of beverage, but without success. The opacity of the milk presented one obstacle and undesired effects made the process unsuitable.

More recently a process has been devised in Liverpool which accomplishes the desired sterilization by electrical means and seems to produce no objectionable results as far as the taste of the milk or other practical considerations are concerned. This has now been put into use upon a commercial scale. The method is based on the use of a high potential alternating current, which is passed through the milk as it traverses a thin tube. Tests show that the bacterial content is reduced to almost zero, the most objectionable species being entirely destroyed. Thus while the milk may not be rendered absolutely sterile it is rendered innocuous so far as disease-producing bacteria is concerned, such as those causing tuberculosis, typhoid fever, etc., frequently found in raw milk.

An application of the electric current to this purpose has been much sought after in the United States and if the new method satisfactorily meets the tests to which it will be subjected, it will undoubtedly receive wide application in this country and become an important competitor of sterilization by heat.

THE EGG INDUSTRY.

Mechanical injury to eggs, due to rough handling, causes a great loss to the egg industry every year, as well as a food loss to the consumer. Eggs that are completely wrecked (and termed "mashed" in commerce) are not only worthless themselves, but they soil a number of eggs otherwise good. When the shell is so broken that the contents are escaping the egg is termed a "leaker."

Another class of eggs which have a technical term applied to them because of mechanical injury are the "checks." "Checks" are eggs the membranes of which are intact but with cracked shells. The egg industry has to contend with an enormous number of these. If the crack or defect is visible only when held before a candle or when it is gently tapped against another sound egg is called a "blind check." The taping of one egg against another is called "clicking" by the egg men.

"Leakers" are thrown out at every stage of handling. The country merchant usually throws them away when he detects them, as do the egg peddlar and the city retailer. They therefore constitute a total loss. "Checks" are sure to rot rapidly when they are on the market for they are ready prey for any mold or germs that may chance to fall into the cracks. They are usually disposed of as soon as possible and are likely to be found in greater numbers in markets near a section producing eggs, says The Retailers' Monthly. If found at a distance from a producing section a cracked egg is more than likely to be of very low quality. However there are plenty of "checks" which are fresh and above reproach except for the damaged shell but they must be handled carefully and rushed to the consumer as quickly as possible.

The egg with a dirty shell is one of the most objectionable features in the egg industry. However it must be remembered that outer filth is not conclusive evidence that the contents of the egg are infected. Of course if eggs have shells that are cracked as well as dirty they may well be regarded with suspicion.

The great drawback in the case of dirty shell eggs is that they bring a lower price in the market although the egg may be large and its contents fresh. Eggs with dirty shells do not store well. They are therefore not available for storing when the surplus production is great and when the market can secure more "clean" eggs than it needs. Often they scarcely pay the expense of marketing.

When shells are stained, as well as dirty, there is an indication that water as well as filth has come in contact with the egg shell and such eggs when stale are often infested with bacteria that have gone through the pores of the shell. Stains cannot usually be washed off. Eggs that are to be kept should never be washed, as water will remove the natural coating that protects the contents of the egg.

The highest percentage of dirty shell eggs occurs during wet spring weather. Since they do not keep well a large number find their way to egg breaking establishments, as do the cracked eggs that are termed "checks."

The egg dealer encounters enough unfavorable conditions resulting from bad weather without those that result from bad handling and mechanical injury. When warm weather prevails eggs go stale and many of them show what is termed " heat." This means that the yolk rises in the shell and is flattened and the white becomes thinner than normal, while the air space in the egg increases in size. In the fertile egg the change goes further, for the egg begins to hatch.

What the commercial trade terms a "weak" egg or a watery egg is merely a stale one which has usually suffered rough handling. The result is that the white is usually thin and the membrane lining of the egg proper has become so loosened that the latter rattles around loosely when the egg is turned. In the late summer and autumn when the hens are not laying and country merchants are withholding stocks for high prices in the future, such eggs form a very large proportion of the current receipts of the city markets.

A SPECIAL BRAND.

The following circular letter has been issued recently by the United States Department of Agriculture:

Many creameries make but little effort to create a demand for their butter by attracting the attention of buyers to the superior quality of their product. Even the best grade of print butter is oftentimes marketed in plain wrappers or cartons with no mark whatever to indicate its quality or where or by whom it was made. Next to producing a product of high quality, the best method of extending the market for butter is the selling of it under a special brand or trade mark. It will tend to create a demand that will increase the creamery returns by bringing a higher price per pound; hence a better price can be paid creamery patrons and this will eventually result in a greater production.

Manufacturers of most of the well known articles of commerce could not have built up their present volume of business without the use of a trade mark as some other form of special brand. So important is the trademark considered that many firms will spend thousands of dollars in litigation rather than lose the exclusive use of the trademark with which they have attracted the attention of buyers. How many of the best selling automobiles would have attained their present reputation without a special brand or name? Would a buyer be attracted toward a machine made of the best material by the most skillful workmen if it did not bear a name which distinguished it from all other automobiles? The same business principles which govern the sale of automobiles prevail in the sale of creamery products. Many butters of inferior quality now find ready sale because they have been advertised under a special brand though the demands for such butter may not continue when the consumers become aware of their poor quality.

Every creamery to increase its profits should adopt a simple but attractive brand or trademark to identify its product on the market. If such a design is used on parchment wrappers and cartons and the butter is of uniformly good quality at all times buyers will soon begin to ask for it. All stationery used by the creamery should bear the same design to assist in placing the special brand before the eyers of the public at every opportunity.

A creamery with a special brand should attempt to encourage large retailers to handle its product under its special name. Some additional advertising in local papers and in other ways may be done to attract the attention of consumers. Each creamery should endeavor to dispose of as much of its butter as possible in the same town and nearby cities. Not only is the special brand a great help in accomplishing this object but it also may be used for developing a market at more distant points. Constant efforts must be made to keep the butter of good quality in order to maintain the reputation of the special brand. Uniformly good quality and advertising are the important factors in developing a market for butter. The use of a special brand is the first step to be made in advertising the products of the creamery.

HAS RIGHT TO PROTECT HEALTH.

The purveyors of foods are finding at every turn that their business is one which has a mighty influence on the health of the public and that the public has complete authority to protect itself against impure and injurious supplies.

A Chicago milk dealer has recently found that the city ordinances in regard to pasteurization of milk and the dating of bottles are good and sound, according to the Illinois Supreme court. This dealer didn't want to use a recording thermometer in his pasteurizer. He didn't want to date the bottles, so that the consumer and the authorities could identify the product and prohibit its sale after it had passed the age limit. The dealer thought these things were an abridgement of his personal liberties and he took his troubles to the Supreme court to find out. The Supreme court said:

"Not only may laws and ordinances require that milk offered for sale shall be pure, wholesome, and free from bacilli of disease, but they may and do, in order to produce this result, prescribe the manner in which such purity, wholesomeness, and freedom from disease shall be secured and made to appear.

"The cows may be required to be registered with a designated public authority, the dairies to be conducted and managed according to prescribed regulations, and, together with the dairy utensils, subjected to inspection; the receptacles in which the milk is contained to be of prescribed character and capacity, the labels to be placed according to fixed regulations and to contain certain required information; the milk to be prepared in the manner, at the times, and by the means directed, and at all times be subjected to inspection.

"These may be drastic restrictions upon private business, but experience and the increasing knowledge of the causes of disease and agencies of its propogation have demonstrated the necessity of such restrictions for the preservation of the public health; and as a means to an end—the protection of the general health against dishonest venders of milk—they all impose inconveniences and expense upon the dealers in milk.

"Legislatures and city councils, in the exercise of the police power, may prohibit all things hurtful to the health and safety of society, even though the prohibition invade the right of liberty or property of an individual."

Commenting on this opinion Hoard's Dairyman says: "The right to do things does not always open the way to do them. But on the whole the public can demand and get any protection that is necessary to the health of the community. It is high time that the moral sense of the people who sell milk, or who produce it, requires them to do their work in such manner as will remove all criticism from their work."

REGARDING GELATINE MANUFACTURE.

The editor of the National Provisioner was asked this question: "Will you please let me know if there is any gelatine made from the horns of cattle and what it is used for?"

The question was answered as follows: "Horn piths, or cores, are taken out as soon as possible after the animal is slaughtered, washed free of blood and dirt, and as a rule are dried preparatory to being used in the manufacture of glue. Gelatine or jelly is made from good, clean material, strictly fresh, which contains considerable glutinous matter.

"Water in which pigs' heads, feet and skins have been cooked is partially evaporated by boiling before allowing to cool, then degreased and filtered, and forms an excellent jelly or gelatine for packinghouse use, such as filling for boneless pigs' feet and hocks, tongues, etc., packed in tin or wooden pails. Cattle and calves' feet and bones, any kind of bones, bone piths, skins, etc., contain much glutinous matter which is convertible into gelatine.

"The manufacture of commercial gelatine is a much more elaborate process than is the making of jelly for packinghouse use. Cattle feet, horn piths or cores, small bones (not available for manufacturing purposes) etc., which have been cooked at a point under boiling to extract the grease, yield considerable gelatine when recooked under steam pressure.

"Primarily whatever stock is used for gelatine is cooked to extract the superfluous grease and to render all foreign matter, such as blood, meat, tissue, etc., easily washed out of the stock. Then the stock is recooked under steam pressure—about forty pounds for three hours or so until all glutinous matter has been extracted. The resultant water, filtered and finished, is gelatine. After filtering the water, it may be further clarified by mixing albumen with the jelly when partially cooked, and then raised to the boiling point and the whole thoroughly amalgamated then allowed to settle awhile and again filtered."

THE COW AND THE FREEZER.

Ice-cream appears to be the equalizer and shock absorber of our dairy industry, and a sort of market representative of the cow, says The Country Gentleman. One hundred million American people now eat about a gallon and a half of this delicacy per capita yearly, and it takes the equivalent of 225,000,000 gallons of whole milk to make the annual supply. During the past ten years the growth of ice-cream manufacture has been remarkable, and the benefits it brings to the dairy industry, as shown recently by one big maker, seem to be unmistakable. For instance, he predicts that by the next census hardly any skim milk will be sold. Today we are selling less than one gallon where six gallons were sold in 1900. Ice-cream has provided a comparatively new outlet for whole milk, so skim milk need not be made in such quantities, and it is too valuable to sell or feed to stock in most localities.

The ice cream maker buys both cream and whole milk from the dairyman, and the cream generally brings better prices when made up into his more valuable product than when it is churned into butter. His demand has made milk prices more uniform the year round, it is said, because for five months in summer, when milk production is heaviest and keeping is most difficult, the ice cream business is booming. Quality also plays its part in the ice cream demand for dairy products, for higher standards are encouraged.

Ice cream stabilizes the market in another way. Condensed milk is an important ingredient in its manufacture, and thirty million gallons of this product are used every year, or about one-quarter of our total output. Much of this condensed milk represents surplus, turned into that form when its sale as whole milk or cream would not be profitable. Hundreds of creameries have installed equipments for condensing surplus milk to sell to the ice cream makers.

From the creamery standpoint ice cream gives a two-fold outlet. Many creameries make it themselves for sale to large customers, and where this is not feasible the ice cream industry, with a capital investment of somewhere between fifty and seventy-five million dollars, offers a suitable market. So the cow and the ice-cream freezer have much in common.

GOOD IN CONSPIRACY HUNTING.

A financial panic sends people to draw money out of the bank, because they fear money will be scarce, says The Country Gentlemen. In the war panic they feared scarcity of food, and promptly started a run on the grocer. Barrels of flour and sacks of sugar were hoarded in this country, while abroad large purchases of food by the well-to-do caused high prices for the poor people who buy from day to day.

France made a good joke out of the situation. A Paris servant was told to see what the pantry held, and presently came back and reported: "Madame, the cheese is mobilizing."

Prices had already started to soar in our own cities when determined investigators set out once more to find that slippery fellow they have been hunting for five years or longer—the "conspirator" who chalks up the price of living, more particularly the price of porterhouse steak, mushrooms and day-old December eggs. Committees were formed, prosecuting attorneys got busy, grand juries waited to return indictments, and the whole machinery of investigators moved again.

In past investigations the only culprits who have been sent to jail have been not big conspirators who juggled food prices, but little chaps who have been found guilty of short weight and adulteration, crooked accounting for produce, and other sordid cheating. The latest investigation uncovered more of these, but thus far no big conspirator has been found, and probably none will be, because it begins to look very much as though "there aint no sich animal."

These conspiracy hunts cost considerable money. But they are undoubtedly useful. For ten years the American people have been going to school to learn economics. They have watched investigation of finance, transportation, insurance, speculation, and other factors bearing upon their lives and the cost of their living, and though no conspiracy has been found, and no change whatever has been made in food prices, the inquiries have shown where there is shortage in supply and waste in distribution. Knowledge that our meat animals are decreasing has led to more interest among stock raising among producers; understanding of the heavy cost of retailing in cities has led to changed habits among consumers. There has lately been a great increase in the number of grocery stores doing business on the plan of cash over the counter for purchases to be taken home by the customers. And signs are not wanting that housewives will take advantage of the closer prices that come when home storage is provided for produce in larger quantities.

There is not much chance that the public will ever catch a big food conspirator. But it will catch something more useful—a true conception of how food is produced and distributed, and what the public itself can do to bring about economics.

A GREAT FOOD RESOURCE.

The canning of salmon has grown to be a great industry in this country, and its possibilities as a source of food supply are almost unlimited, says the Retailers' Journal.

The importance of the industry is recognized by the United States government which has established hatcheries in many localities to propagate the finer varieties and prevent their extinction. This is because salmon are caught while on their way to spawning grounds and spawning is thereby prevented, which would finally result in extinction of the fish unless artificially propagated in hatcheries.

The pack of salmon for 1914 has practically ended and is found to be only five million cases as contrasted with a pack of eight million cases in 1913. The shortage, however, is not unnatural or abnormal, for it was expected and anticipated owing principally to the habits of the fish which do not spawn or run regularly or annually.

The run of salmon is heavy every fourth year, 1913 having been such a year, and is then smaller until the fourth year again comes around. This applies to the Puget Sound Sockeye pack, and then what are called pink salmon run each second year, this year, 1914, being an off year with both kinds, which accounts for the big decrease of three million cases.

The canned salmon industry has existed in the United States for more than sixty years. Previous to that time a few salmon were caught and canned on the Atlantic coast. In 1852 William Hume and two associates established the first salmon cannery, a very crude affair, on the Sacramento river, just opposite the city of Sacramento, then a mere village.

From this humble beginning the industry of canning salmon has grown to enormous proportions. The annual pack is now more than seven million cases of salmon, containing each four dozen 16-oz. cans, and salmon canning is one of the greatest food producing industries of the world.

The demand for canned salmon has grown gradually so that people are now familiar with the splendid value of the product. A can contains 16 ounces net of solid, wholesome, nutritious and palatable food which is of far better economical value than meat. In the introductory period people had to be educated to use canned salmon and at several stages of the process there was an overproduction and periods of great depression and loss.

The high prices of what are usually termed meats and the persistent and intelligent advertising by salmon packers, together with their consciencious adherence to putting quality into their cans, has now brought the demand to such a point that it is no longer a question of how much salmon can be sold. The anxious inquiry on the part of the dealer is as to how much salmon can be produced and what portion of the production can be obtained.

Governments—national, state and foreign, are taking cognizance of the importance of this valuable food resource; and laws to protect salmon from extermination, as well as government and private hatcheries for the propagation of salmon, are now effective and numerous.

PROSECUTIONS ORDERED DURING NOVEMBER.

One hundred and six prosecutions were ordered by Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust during the month of November, 1914, or sixty-five more than were instituted in October. A brief summary of the operations of this branch of the bureau is herewith appended:

The vinegar situation shows improvement. There was but a single prosecution. It was brought in Chester county and was for the sale of cider vinegar adulterated with water and acetic acid.

Under the oleomargarine act three prosecutions were ordered. One was for the sale of oleomargarine as and for butter; two for selling colored oleomargarine. The offenders were doing business in Allegheny and Montgomery counties.

There were four violations of the cold storage act. One was for the sale of cold storage butter not properly marked; three were for selling cold storage eggs, not properly marked with date of entry and withdrawal. All these suits were brought in Philadelphia.

Seven prosecutions were brought for violations of the non-alcoholic drinks law, as follows: For selling champagne cider, misbranded; neither champagne nor cider; contained no fruit juice, 1; lemon soda, misbranded, artificially colored and flavored, 1; peach soda, artificially colored and flavored, 1; strawberry soda, with the same defect, 1; orange soda, similarly sold in violation of law, 3. These prosecutions will receive the attentions of the courts in Berks, Carbon, Lackawanna, Luzerne and Schuylkill counties.

There were ten alleged violations of the sausage act, occurring in Berks, Crawford, Erie and Philadelphia counties, as follows: Selling fresh pork sausage, misbranded, made of beef, 1; fresh pork sausage, unfit for food purposes, 2; selling weiner sausage, containing added water, 7.

For violations of the general food law of the state twelve prosecutions were ordered. The offenses alleged were as follows: Selling cocktail cherries containing added sulphur dioxide, 1; maraschino cherries, similarly adulterated, 1; tomato catsup, made from decomposing material and containing benzoic acid not declared on label, 1; potatoes, decomposed, unfit for food purposes, 1; fresh fish, unfit for food purposes, 2; flour, bleached with nitrites, 3; dried apricots, containing undeclared sulphur dioxide, 3. These prosecutions were ordered in Cambria, Delaware, Erie, Montgomery, Philadelphia, Venango and Warren counties.

The courts of Erie and Philadelphia counties will hear and decide upon prosecutions to the number of eighteen, instituted under the egg act for the following offenses: For selling cold storage eggs as fresh eggs, 2; selling eggs unfit for food purposes, 2; selling eggs unfit for food purposes and not properly denatured, 5; selling stale eggs, as and for fresh eggs, 9.

Nearly half of the total number of prosecutions ordered during November were for violations of the cream and milk act. They numbered 51. These suspected violations occurred in the counties of Allegheny, Beaver, Delaware, Lawrence, Luzerne, Philadelphia and Westmoreland, and were as follows: Selling cream low in butter-fat, 1; skimmed milk, 1; milk, skimmed and watered, 1; milk, below legal standard, 1; milk, not kept free from contamination, unfit for human consumption, 1; milk, low in fats and solids, 2; low in solids, watered, 3; watered, 9; low in fats and solids, skimmed, 32.

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COLD STORAGE LAW.

Harrisburg, Pa.—The Pennsylvania Cold Storage Law has now been in force for more than a year. There are many, however, who do not understand its requirements. For the information of those contemplating engaging in the cold storage business, of food merchants, and of the consumers of the State, the following brief summary of the Law's requirements has been prepared:

Every person operating a cold storage warehouse must do so under a State license.

Every artificially cooled place where any food is held at 40 degrees F. or under, for 30 days or more, is a cold storage warehouse.

Fresh meats, fresh products therefrom, fresh poultry, fresh food, fish, eggs and butter are the articles of food affected by the Act.

Any such food entered in a cold storage warehouse thereby becomes at once cold storage food.

Each warehouse must be officially examined before a license to operate it shall issue; and no license can be issued, if the warehouse is unfit in sanitary condition or equipment.

No food that is unwholesome may be placed in a cold storage warehouse.

The owner of the unwholesome food is held primarily responsible for such entry; but the warehouseman is not absolved from the exercise of reasonable precaution in accepting food entries.

All cold storage foods, or their containers, must bear the date of their entry into and withdrawal from cold storage.

Cold storage foods sold at wholesale must bear the label "Wholesome Cold Storage Food" printed in large type, and the date of original entry of the food into cold storage.

Such foods exposed for sale at retail must be accompanied by a similar label, and when sold, must be delivered in a wrapper bearing a similar statement in large type.

Addition to or the changing or obliteration of any legally required marks, is made a legal offense.

Foods withdrawn from cold storage for sale must not be returned to a cold storage warehouse.

Foods in cold storage found unwholesome upon official examination, will be tagged with a red tag "Unwholesome Food, Unfit for Use as Food."

Foods cold-stored beyond certain limits of time thereby cease to be legally saleable for food purposes. The time limits are: veal 3 months; beef, 4 months; pork, sheep and lamb, 6 months; dressed fowl, drawn 5 months; undrawn, 10 months; eggs, 8 months; butter and fish, 9 months.

Cold storage warehousemen must keep records of all food entries and withdrawals, and report them periodically to the Dairy and Food Commissioner.

Agents of the Commissioner will maintain an inspection of the sanitary conditions, the accounting and marking of foods in cold storage warehouses, as well as examinations as to the wholesomeness of the foods offered for and kept in cold storage.

The Dairy and Food Commissioner is authorized to close warehouses not maintaining sanitary conditions.

The penalties are, for first offense, a fine of $500 maximum; for a second offense, a fine of $1,000 maximum, or a jail sentence of 30 to 90 days, or both.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

The investigation by the United States Department of Agriculture in reference to the number of trips milk bottles last gives the remarkable variation from 6 to 50 trips and an average of 22½ trips. The bottle question is one of the biggest problems for the milk dealers to solve, but since it has been ascertained what the losses are at the present time dealers can perfect their methods and cut down the losses, but 22½ trips should not be taken as a standard, as many dealers get much better service, and nothing under forty trips should be considered as a mark to be reached.

American manufacturers have received in the last decade nearly $50,000,000 as drawbacks under a provision of law which entitles them to a refund of the duties paid on imported articles used in the manufacture of articles exported. In 1883 the amount of drawbacks thus paid was $2,250,000; in 1893, $3,333,334, and in 1913, $4,500,000. Many American industries depend upon foreign countries for a portion of the materials entering into their manufactures for export. The latest annual report on foreign commerce issued by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, enumerates hundreds of exported articles in the manufacture of which foreign merchandise was used as materials. Examples in point include for last year cane sugar used for making condensed milk, confectionery and soft drinks.

The boys of southern Virginia have become interested in raising peanuts, and the United States Department of Argiculture has been organizing peanut clubs to assist them. The first crop has been gathered and such good returns were shown that may result in the organization of similar clubs in other parts of the south.

Hundreds of tons of peach seeds piled at fruit canning establishments in California are now being utilized in a commercial way, and a company has been formed for developing this industry. The seeds are to be cracked by machinery and the meats used in the manufacture of prussic acid and other products. The shells will be sold as fuel.

EIGHT YEARS OF FOOD LAW ENFORCEMENT IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Harrisburg, Pa.—The protection of the honesty and purity of our food supply continues to require a large and keen supervision of market supplies. New laws, enacted from time to time, temporarily increase the labor, which later falls off as the new requirements are more fully obeyed. The cost of this work is paid out of specific appropriations, while the proceeds from fines and license fees are paid directly into the State Treasury. The chemist, legal and financial figures for the last eight years are stated briefly in the following table:

Year.	Samples analyzed.	Cases terminated.	Receipts.	Expenditures.
1907,	7,400	664	$55,732 63	$78,455 83
1908,	8,300	300	54,530 62	69,968 20
1909,	6,200	797	86,594 15	33,700 00
1910,	5,594	667	110,802 95	79,661 65
1911,	8,200	1,029	120,993 48	33,083 15
1912,	7,204	1,049	136,125 49	61,358 55
1913,	6,846	1,025	173,789 76	75,587 12
1914,	4,827	1,010	225,910 78	73,271 41
	54,571	6,541	$964,529 86	$625,585 96

This table shows that the receipts for the year 1914, which are deposited with the State Treasurer for the use of the Commonwealth, were $152,639.37 in excess of the expenditures, which are provided for by a special appropriation, and that for the entire period of eight years the total receipts were $338,943.90 in excess of the expenditures.

Copy of address delivered by James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner, before the Ways and Means Committee of the Altoona Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. President and Gentlemen:

It is always pleasant in speaking to any audience to be able at once to get upon a common basis with it. When a Dairy and Food Official is asked to talk to his audience at a luncheon he is sure of that common interest and also of a cheerful mood in his listeners. So, not hindered, I confess, by the prospect of so enjoyable a meal, I very willingly accepted the invitation to occupy a few moments of your time on this occasion.

The objects of such organizations as yours are, I believe, mutual encouragement, co-operation along certain lines, and the union of forces for the welfare of your community. In a sense, you are engaged in a sort of uplift movement. It is always more inspiring to talk to men who are pulling together than to such as are pulling or falling apart.

It is needless, in this day of organizations for every conceivable purpose, and sometimes without any conceivable purpose, to speak of the advantages of the method.

The object of such bodies as yours must, if they are to live and be worth while, include not simply the idea of removing your difficulties, making things easier for yourselves, aiding the work for the welfare of you all, and gaining aggressive force in securing your common desires; they should include service to your customers. There are two reasons for this: First, it is after all the thing that will in the end give you your highest satisfaction. Second, if you neglect that, your customers will buy of others and all your plans will come to nothing.

If you faithfully try to serve, your neighors will owe you much; but the advantages of the best location, the most beautiful equipment, and the biggest and raciest advertisement will not hold the favor of your custom unless pleasing service crowns the enterprise. It is the customer that comes back, that builds your solid fortune.

It is chiefly, however, with regard to matters that relate to my official work that I wish to speak. The laws that it is my duty to enforce, effect all branches of the food producing business the producer of raw materials, the manufacturer, the wholesaler and the retailer. When they all come within the jurisdiction of the State, the laws bear upon them with the highest measure of equality. When the manufacturer of a faulty goods, or one misbranded, lives without the State, the conditions are less simple, and may work inequalities for which there is no easy cure.

The retailer can relieve himself of much responsibility by getting his stocks from Pennsylvania Jobbers and makers.

There is, I know, a great cry in these days of high living costs, about doing away with the middleman. We may sometimes have more of them than we need for a particular service; but they are here to stay, and all the parcels post and express company plans mean only the employment of one set of middlemen instead of another.

The point I want to make is this: Since you are going to use middlemen, use the best of them, those you know most about, those in your own county, those upon whom you can rely if trouble comes.

Don't let an attractive quantity discount offered by a salesman you have never met before, induce you to buy a big stock of goods you don't known from a firm beyond the reach of the laws that govern you, and, by so doing, abandon the men who have served you well for years, who have extended your credits in dull seasons, whose description always fits the goods they deliver, and who, in turn, know what and how to buy or make the things you want.

And, if I were talking to your customers, I'd say the same thing to them—Patronize your home stores if they keep them clean, have the goods, and give you a square deal. It is the overhead costs, even more than those of the goods, that fix the retail price. If you buy from your neighbor, he has no more rent and little more wages to pay, but he has more profit and, as human nature goes, is sure to divide it with you in the end by lowering the prices. If you buy from somebody else, it takes more of your time, more traveling expense, more delivery cost, and, after all, you probably don't get anything better. If your neighbor's business thrives, his property grows in value, and with it lifts the value of his neighbor's, your own. Every dollar you spend in out-of-town places pulls down the selling value of your own land.

To clinch this idea, let me tell you that many years' experience has shown that the retailer who bought within Pennsylvania has had the least frequent calls to court, and, when he did have to go, most rarely had to go alone and foot the bill. Blair County retailers, if you buy from a high-class Altoona jobber, he won't let you get into trouble if he can help it; and if you get there through any mistake of his, he'll take the burden off your shoulders. It is the fellow who lives outside the State and thus beyond the reach of our law, who plays upon your lack of knowledge of his goods and your love of a shrewd deal, to load you up with low-priced, but much lower quality stuff that you can't sell under the label it bears without risk of having the law touch you.

You have asked me to speak of the food laws and their enforcement. They are, in reality, very simple in their requirements. Concerning what foods you make or sell, they say:

(2). Let them be clean.
(3). Let them be sound and wholesome.
(4). Let them not be sold under false or misleading names.

In some special cases, the law defines a food. These definitions I need not repeat; they are clear to all who read the law.

Concerning the manner of their enforcement, there is much that might be of interest, but I will ask you to indicate, by question, the matters about which you particularly wish to know. I shall be pleased to answer.

Before you begin, however, let me add that I am absolutely aware that I can carry the law to no higher level of enforcement than that of public opinion. Even Moses, the great leader, with God-given power, could not win the battle without faithful supporters to hold up his hands. I ask your encouragement and support in this service committed to me—a service so important to all consumers and all honest tradesmen. Without your aid and that of a thousand other good men and true in the food trade, I cannot win your battle.

ADDED ARTIFICIAL COLORING MATTER.

SOME REASONS WHY IT SHOULD BE PROHIBITED IN EDIBLE ALIMENTARY PASTES.

The following letter from Charles Wesley Dunn, counsel for the American Speciality Association, addressed to Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust, concerns a subject in which both manufacturers and consumers are vitally interested, and is herewith printed for the information of the general public:

New York, N. Y., January 19, 1915.

Mr. James Foust,
State Dairy & Food Commissioner, Harrisburg, Pa.

Dear Sir: I append hereto a Proposed Uniform Law Prohibiting the Use of added Artificial Coloring Matter in such Edible Alimentary Pastes as Macaroni, Spaghetti, Vermicelli and Noodles, to supplement the present State Law. I respectfully ask you to consider the three following reasons why this law should be enacted:

First: Its enactment will eliminate an unquestionable and injurious fraud upon the consuming public, a fraud growing apace with the marked increase in the general consumption of these products.

Second: Its enactment will eliminate a very hurtful class of unfair competition and enforce competition upon the real merits.

Third: The present State Law is inadequate in this respect we believe, as the indication upon the label of the use of such added artificial coloring matter satisfies the present law, thus avoiding the charge of fraud under the present law. Here is an instance, in our opinion, where a supplemental law is necessary.

1. The manufacturers Request this Law.

This Association is composed of several trade sections including in such trade sections manufacturers of similar products. At the recent annual meeting in Philadelphia the Macaroni Section of this Association, composed of a number of the larger manufacturers of Macaroni, Noodles and similar products, unanimously adopted a resolution earnestly urging the enactment of the appended law, in every state, also the enactment of a similar Federal Law, supplementing the Federal Food and Drugs Act. Such a Supplemental Federal Act has already been introduced in Congress and early favorable action is anticipated. A letter similar to this is being written to every State Food Commissioner, so that during the present winter such a law may be generally enacted by the several states.

The National Association of Macaroni and Noodle Manufacturers, representing, also, the Macaroni and Noodle Manufacturers, generally, of this country, has, in addition, adopted a strong resolution earnestly asking for the general enactment of this law.

Mr. C. F. Mueller, Jr., the President of the C. F. Mueller Co., Jersey City, New Jersey, is the Chairman of the Macaroni Section of this Association and the President of the National Association of Macaroni and Noodle Manufacturers. It is at the instance of this section and this association that I write you at this time asking for your co-operation.

2. Such Use of Added Coloring Matter is Solely to Perpetuate an Injurious Fraud.

Artificial coloring matter is added to Macaroni, Noodles and similar pastes for the sole purpose of working a fraud.

Please bear in mind that we are not now considering the harmfulness of the added coloring matter. We are only concerned at this time with the question of fraud.

Such coloring matter has no preservative or nutritive qualities, and its use clothes an inferior article with a dress imitating not only a better article but, in the case of the egg products, the real and genuine article.

In the case of the egg noodle, egg macaroni and similar pastes, where eggs are used for the purpose of imparting additional food value and flavor measured in proportion by the quantity of eggs used. The use of eggs in these egg products also imparts a distinctive and attractive yellowish color thereby distinguishing the richer and more desirable product from the cheaper and less nutritive product.

Egg noodles of the best grades are made from fresh eggs and selected wheat flour and are highly nutritious and are so easily digested even by delicate stomachs that they are frequently recommended for invalids and convalescents. The fraudulent egg noodle or noodle (the terms being synonymous) is, therefore, a matter of considerable concern lacking as it is in the expected nutritious qualities.

Eggs are expensive and coloring matter is cheap, so that as a result, no eggs or practically no eggs are used in some of the alleged pastes, but the same appearance is obtained by the use of artificial coloring matter. We may state, generally, that artificial coloring matter is added to the egg pastes or to the so-called egg pastes principally for the purpose of simulating the use of eggs.

In the case of macaroni and similar pastes, usually made without eggs, the added artificial coloring matter is used to give the product the appearance of having been made from the best and most expensive and nutritious macaroni wheat semolina.

The qualities sought by the macaroni manufacturer are a rich food product having a bright, clear, amber color, with elasticity before cooking, and sufficient "force" to retain the original form after having been cooked.

The pastes of the highest grade are translucent and of the shade of very light amber. The use of cheaper and less nutritious raw material produces a darker and duller color prompting a toning up in the color, to produce a more merchantable article. The consumer, therefore, when coloring is added, is not able to distinguish in appearance between the real article and the imitation.

The use of such added artificial coloring matter has here no justification, as in some instances, where the appearance is made more palatable and appetizing and pleasing to the eye without the working of a fraud.

There can be no question, as any one familiar with the subject will inform you, that the use of coloring matter in these pastes is for a fraudulent purpose only. The consumer is injured because he is thereby unable to distinguish quality and merit and to disinguish between the real and genuine article, on the one hand, and the imitation and inferior article, on the other hand.

The proposed law would enforce the sale of these articles entirely upon their own merits and thus enable the consumer to make his own distinction between the better and poorer, between the genuine and imitation.

We venture to assert that not a single justifiable reason may be advanced warranting the use of such added artificial coloring matter. It is clearly in the public interest, therefore, that such a law be enacted.

3. The Present Law is Not Sufficient.

The Federal Food and Drugs Act and similar State Laws afford no sufficient protection to the consuming public, in this instance, as the declaration upon the label of the use of such coloring matter, voids the legal charge of fraud under such laws. Over seventy-five per cent. it is estimated of these products are sold in bulk and the consumer never sees the container and never receives this information and so is utterly unable to judge for himself the truth of the matter. Again the use of this legend on the label of small packaged goods has not served at all to accomplish the intended purpose as this fraudulent practice is flourishing more strongly every day. We believe, therefore, that the present Federal Act and the similar State laws are not sufficient in this respect, and that any rule made under such laws prohibiting the use of such coloring matter could not be judicially enforced. Supplemental legislation is necessary.

4. Unfair Competition is Perpetuated.

The legitimate manufacturers ask your support in obtaining this law, as the manufacturers who use expensive, rich, high grade raw materials and sufficient eggs, in the egg pastes, must meet the competition of a manufacturer who uses cheaper and inferior raw materials, with little or no eggs at all in the so-called egg pastes, and the consumer is almost helpless to rightly decide. This present unfair competition almost compels the legitimate manufacturer to lower his standards in order to remain in business and meet this fraudulent competition.

In conclusion we earnestly ask if you will not co-operate in remedying this situation and by urging the enactment of the appended bill, believing that such a law is entirely in the public interest. We shall be glad to give you any additional information.

Awaiting your early reply, I am,

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES W. DUNN.

Attorney for the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association.

VALUE OF FISH.

The following is taken from the Lewistown (Me.) Journal:

Eat fish and save the price of luxuries and at the same time get as much nutriment if not more than in a given quantity of meat. If the foot and mouth disease bothers you—well fish haven't any feet.

Portland is one of the largest fishing ports in the east and is outshadowed only by Boston. With the price of beef almost prohibitive due to the fact that New England does not raise cattle to any appreciable quantity, and the increased cost of raising the product in the west, to which are added the recent disturbances in the wood markets the relief to Lewistown and Auburn people is fish.

The public does not apparently realize the healthfulness and palatableness and cheapness of fish as food.

The protein found in fish and meats as well as in vegetables repairs the nerves and tissues of the body and it is in this constituent of all foods that the consumer is directly concerned.

Protein is found in the white of eggs, in the curd of milk, and in the lean of fish and meat. In the fish and meat protein is found in substantially the same proportions with the advantages that fish averages from one-half to one-third cheaper both in purchase and cost of preparation than does meat.

If the housewife buys a pound of smoked ham she gets 16 per cent. of protein, while a pound of haddock contains 18 per cent, a pound of pork chops 17 per cent, while a pound of herring yields 19 per cent; blue fish gives an equal amount and so on down through the list.

Combined with bread and butter, potatoes, fruits and vegetables, fish makes a meal on which athletes might train to their finest point.

Through habit Fridays, fish is seen on the tables but seldom on other days and then the dish many times fails to find relish. Sauces which add flavor and piquancy, croquettes, salads, pattes, and many ways of serving the food are not considered as much as possible.

Little has been done to stimulate the eating of fish, but take the instance of western people here on a visit and some times meal after meal is made up largely of fish. Eat fish and be a philosopher for sea asks no titles, calls for no conservation, at least only in extreme cases, and is a distinct instance of net gain without expenditure of feeding or earning.

SHRINKAGE AT CITY PLANTS.

Because of close competition, high cost of production, economics both great and small must be practiced if the milk business is to show a profit, says the Dairy Division's milk plant letter.

One important economic factor in the handling of milk is the shrinkage and waste at the city plant. Estimates of daily losses from these sources have been obtained from 41 dealers. These estimates which include all losses from handling milk from the time it is shipped varied from 0.5 per cent., to 4 per cent., and averaged 2.15 per cent., of the amount handled by each dealer. Some dealers thought they were losing little or nothing. Quite a large number reported a loss but could give no definite estimate of the amount lost; no doubt they were losing as much or more than the average. It may be thought that these losses are unavoidable, but investigation revealed many unnecessary leaks which appear to be negligible but amount to a considerable sum in the course of a year. If a dealer handles 5,000 gallons a day and losses 2.15 per cent., his loss at 30 cents a gallon is $32,25 a day or $11,771.25 a year. Even if this loss could be lessened by one-half, the amount saved would more than pay the salary of a man to find these leaks and prevent losses from other causes.

Among the ways in which these losses occur are the following:

1. Leaky cans.
2. Dented or battered cans.
3. Cans not full.
4. Careless handling of cans, both in transferring from cars and in dumping.
5. Inefficient draining of cans.
6. Leaky or battered apparatus.
7. Fillers out of repair, as leaky valves.
8. Losses at the filler. This may be caused by the valves not being properly adjusted, carelessness in handling, breakage of bottles, etc.
10. Loss from not removing all the milk from pasteurizer pipes, pumps tanks, or other apparatus.
11. Loss from the process of pasteurizing and clarifying by evaporation and mechanical losses.

There is necessarily a certain amount of shrinkage in transferring from cans to bottles and in the process of clarifying and pasteurizing but most of the losses from the other sources mentioned should be eliminated.

Although many of the more progressive dealers are making special efforts to reduce the shrinkage to a minimum, it is worthy of more attention than it generally receives.

SHOULD CONTROL MILK SUPPLY.

Nathan Straus, the pioneer, who for twenty-three years has urged the purification of the milk supplies by pasteurization, argues that the municipalities ought to take over the protection of the milk supplies.

In a paper before the American Public Health Association he pointed out that "city-owned, city-purified and city-distributed water supplies had cut out one of the three great causes of typhoid fever, and this policy has been vindicated."

"But, "he said," milk, even more than water, is a carrier of the germs of disease, not of one disease but of six—typhoid, scarlet fever, diphtheria, septic sore throat, summer complaints—and more serious than all else, milk is a common vehicle for the transmission of tuberculosis to human beings.

"We have the fact that municipal governments intervened and took control of the water supplies, chiefly to stop the ravaging of their cities by one disease, typhoid fever. My proposition is that the same policy should be followed in dealing with an article of food of universal use and necessity that is a common cause of six plagues.

"The obligation to do this is recognized by every municipality; the extent to which the obligation is carried out varies. The method everywhere is supervision—the method that was tried and proved insufficient in the protection of the people from typhoid germs in water.

"The only room for discussion is to how this duty is to be fulfilled. By ordinance that does not inspect? By inspection that does not inspect? By post-mortem supervision that deals with the dairyman or other dealer after the raw milk has started an epidemic?

"At a vast expenditure of effort a great improvement has been achieved in the milk supplies of cities. No one knows this better than I do, for I have followed the work day in and day out through twenty-three long years—I am thankful for what has been done. But it yet remains true that much of the milk sold in the cities is neither pure nor safe.

"The consequence is that milk-borne diseases continue to exact their toll of human lives, particularly of infant lives.

"I would be the last to discount or criticise the action taken by New York City and Philadelphia and contemplated or partially carried out in many other cities, in requiring the proper pasteurization of milk supplies under municipal supervision. This is the greatest step forward in the history of modern war for the prevention of disease. It will save lives, not by the hundreds, but by the thousands.

"But I would be no less frank if I did not admit that I look forward to a system more efficient than pasteurization under municipal supervision. Such supervision is of necessity occasional and lacking in complete efficiency. Its history, I believe, will parallel that of municipal supervision of the purification of privately operated water supplies. It will do much good, but finally, will give way, I believe, to a system that will do more good.

"Absolute municipal control of the milk supplies, will, I believe, be found to be the effective way not merely to check but to wipe out the milk-borne diseases.

"This thorough control may be achieved in two ways:

"By the cities taking over the function of supplying milk to the consumer just as the cities have taken over the function of supplying water to each household.

"Or by the cities performing the function of pasteurizing the entire milk supply and delivering the milk in sealed containers to the dealers in distribution.

"Neither system means increased cost of milk, for the first wipes out the high cost of competition, with the duplication of milk routes by rival dealers, while both systems give the benefits of the economics of a few large central plants as compared with a large number of smaller plants.

"The country is awakening to the excessive cost of the great white plague—a cost figured in millions of dollars and of lives and in suffering and sorrow that is incalculable.

"With this awakening there will come, I believe, a demand similar to that which led the municipalities to take over the function of supplying water, and as the people realize the bearing of milk upon the spread of six plagues, of which the greatest is tuberculosis, I feel sure that there will come irresistible insistence upon the absolute assurance of safety from these infections that can be had only in the municipalization of the milk supplies.

"I think the time has come to recognize these facts frankly—the time to insist urgently upon pasteurization and to consider and work out the problem of making this protection thoroughly efficient by municipal pasteurization."

ATLANTIC CRAB LINES.

That the provisions of the proposed law placing migratory food fish under Federal protection should be extended to cover crabs was the general opinion of members of the National Association of Shellfish Commissioners expressed at their recent meeting held in Baltimore. The crab industry has become one of Maryland's principal assets and lack of proper conservation is regarded as unbusinesslike in the extreme. At the meeting the fact was brought out that the actual waste and destruction of migratory fish and shellfish in the Chesapeake bay will exceed $1,000,000 in money value annually. According to Commissioner Sweepson Earle Maryland throws away annually 866.7 tons of crab meat having a wholesale market value of 18 cents a pound ($312,015.60) a year in one branch of the crab industry.

"The hard-crab packing houses situated along the tidewater counties buy from the crabbers by the barrel and every barrel contains a number of crabs so small that after they are steamed the picker (who is paid according to quantity) will not bother with them and the little crabs are thrown on the crab trash pile. In this way thousands are destroyed daily which if left in the water four months would become developed crabs. Forty-five developed crabs will pick six pounds of crab meat. An estimate of 1,000 crabs to 100 crab houses (not being half the number engaged) working five months, or 130 days, indicates the destruction of 866.7 tons. This would feed 6,933,638 persons to a sea-food meal.

"The egg-bearing female crabs, having the eggs attached, have been taken within the waters of Maryland and sold to one crab house of 20 per cent. to the barrel. The crabs in this condition are of no value to the crab houses, and are thrown back into the water, but the female is injured in the shipment and the majority die before producing.

"There is no cull law on crabs in Maryland and in addition Maryland gives no protection to the female. When we combine this loss in the crab industry with small fish taken illegally in Chesapeake Bay a million dollars loss annually is a very low estimate.

"Virginia and North Carolina seems to hold the key to the spawning grounds of the Chesapeake Basin, and if the female crabs are allowed to be destroyed in the egg-bearing stage, then Maryland is helpless to control the future supply. The ocean crab which reaches Hampton Roads in June or July is not found in Maryland waters.

"Japan exports $50,000,000 worth of canned crab meat annually. The United States imports 60 per cent. and England 40 per cent. With proper handling Chesapeake Bay could supply a large percentage of this country's needs."

HOW TO PRODUCE BETTER CREAM.

L. G. Kinkle, Dairy Department, University of Missouri, in The Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal:

A farmer will not buy clover seed filled with dodder, if he knows what he is doing. He will not buy wheat half full of rye. It will not be necessary to explain why he will not do this, but it often seems necessary to explain why he should not expect to sell off-flavored cream and receive the highest market price for it.

The best butter-maker in the world can't make butter receiving the highest market price and make it out of poor cream. He can out of good cream. The difference between the top price that you see butter quoted at, and the price that your creamery is able to sell butter at, is from one to several cents. Poor quality causes them to take less than highest prices. The problem of how to produce better cream and obtain the highest market price for it is not a hard one to solve. A creamery buying old cream cannot manufacture good butter and can't pay the farmer the highest prices for butterfat. When every creamery will buy according to grade, then, and only then will the farmer receive better prices. Missouri butter is notably poor. We are going to put better butter on the market by giving better cream and by co-operation with the creameries the farmers of this State are going after the money the farmers of Wisconsin and other states are enjoying.

To produce better cream it is necessary to understand why cream gets old and off-flavored so quickly. It is simply because the cream producer has not observed the two following rules here laid down. If one will practice these rules he will have done much to improve his product.

First—be as clean as possible in handling your milk and cream from the time of the milking to final delivery of the cream.

Second—Immediately after separation of milk cool the cream rapidly and as low as possible.

All vessels, utensils, strainers, separators, etc., must be in a clean condition if good cream is to result. Milk buckets with deep seams, open cracks or rusty spots afford a place for lodgement for filth and dirt which gets into the milk. Separators must be cleaned after every separation. Partial cleaning will not be sufficient. All apparatus should be rinsed in hot water and placed in the sun to dry. Do not dry the utensils with cloths, but let them drain.

Barns should be kept as free from manure as possible. Animals should not be allowed to wade through mire and manure. One should not feed just before milking, as the air will be full of dust which gets into the bucket. Clean the udder, flank and teats a little before milking. Milk into small topped buckets and don't wet the hands.

Milk should be separated at once after milking and the cream cooled at once. Quick cooling is important and cannot be emphasized too much. Cream can be improved 50 per cent. if cooled at once and to a low temperature.

To cool the cream it should be set in a bucket and this placed in cold water. The cream must be stirred frequently to insure quick cooling. A good barrel sawed off at a point near the centre will make a good tub. Set the cream in cans in such a tub, trough or box and have cold running water pass in near the bottom and an outflow near the top.

FOOD VALUE OF OYSTERS.

"A pound of meat without skin, bone or waste is unknown to the housewife," says President Killian, of the Oyster Growers' and Dealers' Association of North America.

"A pound of such all edible meat at twenty cents is beyond her fondest hopes. Such a value would be a welcome help to her in her present perplexity, when the average housekeeper is confronted with smaller allowances and higher prices on most of her needs.

"Yet it is possible for the consumer to get just that sort of value, for a dry measure quart of oysters will weigh two pounds, and should be bought for forty cents and has none of the waste in the trimming and dressing as has all other flesh food, be it fish, fowl or animal meat.

"A dealer can sell a dry measure quart of oysters at forty cents at most points within a distance of 1,000 miles from the coast—and give a dry measure quart at that. It may be necessary for the housewife to demand it in order to get it, but get it she can.

"Nor is economy the only merit that may be claimed for the oyster. It has a delicious flavor. It can be prepared in many ways as is indicated in the cook book issued by the Oyster Growers' and Dealers' Association of North America, which shows 'one hundred ways' to prepare them. It has nutrients that compare favorably with foods at higher prices.

"Government investigation and inspection in recent years has made the conditions under which oysters are grown and marketed showed great improvements so that today they are not only one of the most sanitary foods that the American housewife purchases, but have become in consequence of their merits, one of the foods that figure in the combatting in the high cost of living."

HEALTHFULNESS OF COFFEE.

Properly made, even if used in considerable quantities, coffee is not only harmless, but on the contrary, is healthful and beneficial in its effects with nearly all persons, remarks the Grocers' Magazine.

Coffee is slightly stimulating and has a tendency to make the brain more active, and is also soothing to the body generally. It has a tendency to arrest waste and to build up the system. The better the grade of coffee, the more healthful it is, and if good coffee is secured and properly prepared, the average person may drink several cups a day without experiencing any ill effects.

The over-boiling of coffee tends to extract the caffeine, making the coffee bitter and thus neither as attractive in the matter of taste nor as healthful as it would be were it not over-boiled.

Medical men very generally say that the dietary influence of coffee is favorable as an aid to digestion.

Coffee is very valuable as a medicine in cases of typhoid fever and as a preventative of various diseases. Persons living in malarial climates are very much aided by coffee as it has a tendency to enable them to avoid malaria and fever. It is also an excellent remedy for alcoholism.

Of course there are some persons who cannot use coffee freely without experiencing some internal disturbance. The number of such persons is very small proportionately.

There are very many persons who do not make coffee properly, and if grocers would generally interest themselves in this subject as far as their customers are concerned, it would result in far greater sales of high grade coffee. The use of condensed milk in coffee is highly recommended. It is claimed to be more healthful than raw milk and sugar, it having gone through a chemical change in the condensing process. The flavor of most coffee is improved by the use of cream, especially if the cream is placed in the cup first. The active principle of coffee, caffeine, is the same as tannin or theine is in tea, and a similar property found in cocoa. Caffeine is used in medicine as a stimulant, and for other important uses.

OUR CHEMICAL SENSES.

Two of our senses are intimately connected with chemical action—those of smell and taste. Their relationships are so close that the boundary line between them is more imaginary than real. In many cases we commonly ascribe to one of them sensations that usually belong to the other, as when we speak of the "taste" of certain foods that are almost tasteless, but possess an appetizing odor. Since chemical action only can take place between substances in actual contact, says Alfred J. Lotka in the Scientific American Supplement we can become aware of the smell or taste of any object only by actual contact with it or its vapors. This places a restriction on the scope of these senses, and in man, at any rate, they are not developed to the same degree as sight and hearing, comments the Literary Digest. Nevertheless they perform important functions, Mr. Litka in his article states:

"Their primary purpose (is), no doubt, to enable the individual to exercise the proper judgment in the selection of his food. This is indicated by the organs of smell and taste in and near the mouth. In the case of animals the senses of taste and smell do very efficiently fulfil this function; in fact, the presumption is that animals have no other means of distinguishing healthy from injurious or poisonous materials for food. In the case of man, the same reliance cannot be placed the sense of taste, as some poisons have a pleasant taste, and some substances which are more or less harmless have a disagreeable taste. Aside from the perfectly normal discrepancies between our likes and dislikes in the matter of taste, and the things that are good for us or otherwise, individual persons may be subject to various peculiar abnormal vagaries of the sense of taste. The simplest of these is a more or less complete "taste blindness," which accompanies various diseased conditions ranging in seriousness from a common cold to incurable affections of the central nervous system. In the case of general paralysis it is especially the sense for saltiness that is lost. People subject to epileptic fits almost invariably lose the sense for sweetness, often also for saltiness, but usually not that for bitterness at the time of one of their attacks. Sometimes it is only one half—usually the left—of the mouth and tongue that loses its sensitiveness. Persecution maniacs who are in fear of being poisoned often have an exaggerated sense of taste.

"Occasionally a peculiar case is found in which different tastes are confused; the patient, for example, asserts that a bitter substance tastes salty to him. In the case of neoropathic persons, that is to say, persons of a somewhat unstable mental balance, certain tastes are sometimes associated with color sensations. A temporary loss of the sense of taste can be produced at will by painting the tongue with certain drugs. Cocain if applied somewhat liberally, causes local anesthesia; in mild applications it merely deadens the sense for bitterness. Some insane persons are subject to taste hallucinations. Perversions of the taste, more or less morbid in character, are observed in hysterical and other persons."

A peculiar and interesting phenomenon noted by Mr. Lotka is that of contrast, whereby after one has partaken of something bitter or salty, pure water tastes sweet. Again a dilute solution of potassium chlorate, which has itself little taste, causes water to taste intensely sweet. If the mouth is rinsed with copper sulphate or potassium permaganate solution cigar smoke acquires a repulsively sweet taste. It is also said that if the air contains mere traces of prussic acid, cigar smoke acquires a peculiar taste, which thus furnishes an efficient alarm signal. To quote further:

"Substances possessing a marked flavor are very important in daily life, perhaps none more so than salt, sugar and vinegar. As regards the first of these it is absolutely indispensable and there is no substitute for it. The place of vinegar can, in a measure, be taken by other acids, such as, for instance, lemon juice. Sugar is not one single substance, but is the name given to an entire class of more or less closely related compounds containing carbon, hydrogen and oxygen. Sugar fulfils a double function, being both a food itself and on account of its pleasant taste an appetiser."

"The chemistry of flavoring material, and the study of chemical constitution in relation to the taste of various substances, have grown to large dimensions, yet until recently no one collected work of reference on the subject was available. This gap has just been filled from the pen of Dr. G. Cohn, on organic flavoring materials, published in Berlin, from the introduction of which many of the data given above are taken. The bulk of the book is highly technical and gives a mass of data regarding the taste of a large number of substances. For those working in the field, whether from a purely scientific interest or for the sake of application to practical ends, this collection should prove very valuable.

"We have here culled out points of interest to the general reader, and will close with one more observation of this character taken from the chapter on Psychology of Taste. It is rather surprising to read that girls have a more sensitive taste for bitter and boys for sweet. Their taste for saltiness is equally sensitive. Adult woman has a more highly developed sense of taste than man for sweet, bitter and sour. For salty materials there is not much difference; if anything man is a little more sensitive than woman. A facetious person might be tempted to say that this must be taken with a grain of salt.

ONE-TREE FARMS.

On the borderland of Bolivia is a farm, and a rarely prosperous one at that, which consists of a single tree, says the Country Gentleman. It is a rubber tree and supports a family of seven persons in comparative affluence. This lone tree has been nursed along for generations, until it now measures about twenty-seven feet in circumference at the base. The daily yield of caout-chouc is more than twenty-two pounds during the one hundred and twenty days of the year that the tree can be successfully tapped, or almost a ton and a half of this precious product annually. On the basis of this yield the tree has an estimated value of $60,000. Few growing things are so tenderly guarded.

There is an alligator pear tree in California that is estimated to be worth $20,000—a tree that is said to employ a press agent and to carry a life insurance policy. It has been widely heralded as the tree of trees, and cuttings from it are sold for almost their weight in gold. But it must now play second fiddle to this Bolivian marvel, and before long we may hear of some new wonder of nature that will outrival the South American superlative of all single plant growths.

As a sublimely simple farming operation, however, we must all bow for a while to this one tree ranch of the inland republic.

THE FARMER'S BALANCE WHEEL.

The backbone of any successful farm plan, remarks the Country Gentleman, is the system followed in crop rotation. About the first thing the county agent looks into when he visits the farm are whether a well established rotation is followed from year to year, and whether this rotation is adapted to the type of soil, the climate and the uses to which the crops are put. Nearly every important improvement in the farm plan must follow the line of the rotation. The use of fertilizers must conform to it, and the silo, the storage facilities and the animals kept to consume the forage are all influenced by it.

"What Shall I Grow Next Year?" does not stop with next year. It includes a period of three or four years according to the length of the rotation. For thirty years discussions at farmers' meetings and institutes and agricultural colleges have been largely devoted to rotations. At first the question was what rotation would give the largest net returns of salable produce. Later when declining fertility became a live topic, the farmers asked what rotations would return the largest yields and at the same time maintain fertility at the lowest cost.

Our grandfathers had considerable faith in the bare fallow which they thought gave the soil the rest it required. Now we know that the bare fallow is simply a gap in the rotation which was necessary because of the entire absence of a systematic succession of crops. New crops have aided in filling this gap; the vetches, field peas and a dozen others, which were formerly unknown, are now grown quite generally. We have learned to use them as cover crops, as green manures and as inter-crops put in before the previous crop is harvested. The building of the rotation nowadays is a more complex task than it once was. Every experiment station has spent much time in testing rotation, and the result of these tests are available to aid anyone in making out a rotation to suit his own conditions. The first step in systematizing any general farm is the adoption of the right rotation. Round it revolves the whole scheme of permanent agriculture.

SOME FARM FIGURES.

According to the last census, taken in 1910, the enumerators returned data for 6,361,502 farms in the United States containing 878,798,325 acres, of which 478,451,750 were improved land, the acreage of woodland and other comprising 400,451,575 acres. The average acreage of all land per farm in the United States for 1910 was 138.1.

The states of Iowa and Illinois had the largest proportion, over 75 per cent. of improved land to the total land area. In the total value of farm property in 1910 Illinois ranked first with $3,905,321,075; Iowa was second with $3,745,860,544, while Rhode Island was last with a little less than $33,000,000.

The figures for the value of all farm crops in 1909 showed that Illinois was first, closely followed by Iowa, Texas and Ohio in the order named. The value of the farm products in the United States increased 83 per cent. during the decade 1899-1909.

The states of Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut reported the highest value per acre of crops followed by New Jersey, South Carolina and Arizona, all of which states produced crops in excess of $25 per acre. For average value of farm crops, per farm, North Dakota led, Nevada was second, California third, South Dakota, fourth and Nebraska fifth, each with a valuation for crops of over $1,500 per farm.

SECRETARY HOUSTON'S REPORT.

The annual report of Secretary of Agriculture D. F. Houston has been issued and deals chiefly with the meat supply, farm economics, marketing, various cotton problems, rural credits, good roads and the dissemination of information by the government. Under the review of the work of the office of markets, it is stated that a record of more than 8,500 marketing associations, 2,700 cooperative and farmers' elevators, 2,500 farmers' cooperative creameries and more than 1,000 cooperative fruit and produce associations in the United States had been secured, indicating that the cooperative idea has made a larger growth in this country than is generally realized. It is stated that the conclusion seems justified that in communities where farmers' associations are properly constituted and conducted better results are obtained than under a system of individual handling. The Office of Markets, has, among other things, investigated the subject of city marketing and distribution, including the various types of public markets, wholesale terminal markets, auctions and other methods of distributing food in cities, and a special object of inquiry has been the possibility of marketing by parcel post and express. The appropriation to the Office of Markets has been raised to $200,000:

THE MARYLAND CRAB AND ITS VALUE.

From the Oysterman and Fisherman.

Just how long the "blue crab" has inhabited the waters of the Chesapeake bay is not known. The early settlers may have feasted upon them but we find nothing in history to confirm this fact. The crab has only been considered a valuable sea food for forty years. It was in 1873 that the first shipment of crabs was made from Crisfield to Philadelphia, although soft crabs were eaten by the citizens of that town some time before there was any thought of shipping them to the cities.

In four decades the people of the country have been educated to eat crabs in every conceivable way, from a dainty order of soft crabs about the size of half a dollar, served at the leading hotels, to a large highly seasoned "devil crab" sold on the streets. The demand for this water food has increased rapidly. It is estimated that in 1910 there was shipped from Crisfield 120,000,000 soft and 25,000,000 hard crabs to various points of the United States and Canada.

Crisfield, in Somerset county (Md.) is not only the center of the "soft crab" industry but the largest shipping point for crabs in the world. The "hard shell crab" industry is extensively carried on at Cambridge and Oxford.

There are six stages of a crab's life, commonly classified as follows: First, the "hard crab" (its natural condition); second, the "shedder" one that has just entered the shedding stage; third, a "peeler," when the old shell has begun to break; fourth, a "buster," when the new shell can be seen; the "soft crab," sixth, a "paper shell" or "buckram," when the new shell is beginning to harden. Crabs are sold by the fishermen (those engaged in the "soft crab" industry) principally in the "peeler" condition, just before the shedding takes place. The "soft crab" houses located along the tributaries, place the "peeler" crabs in specially constructed floats for twenty-four hours when it becomes a "soft crab" and is packed in ice and shipped to market.

The "soft shell" and "peeler" crabs are caught in scrapes similar to the oyster dredge, although the bar of iron which is dragged over the bottom has no teeth. In place of the chain is a long net bag which catches the crab, together with the sea grass.

The "hard crab" industry, carried on largely in the upper tide water counties, is conducted in a different manner. The fishermen engaged in taking the "hard crabs" are equipped with "trot lines." These lines vary in length from 200 to 1,000 yards. The bait, consisting of calf pelt, spoiled beef tripe, etc., is attached to snoods of fine twine about 18 inches in length at intervals of three or four feet along the main line. The gasoline or sail canoe has attached to its side a projecting arm, and as the line passes over this arm the crabs are taken off the bait by the use of hand nets. The hard crabs are steamed and the meat picked out.

VALUE OF MILK AS FOOD.

In the educational exhibits of the Iowa Dairy and Food department, different articles of food were on exhibition and placards stating the cost of each as compared with one quart of milk.

In one exhibit the following information was given:

A quart of milk costing eight cents is equal in value to any of the following:

Seven ounces of full cream cheese costing 9½ cents.
Ten eggs costing 20 cents.
Eleven ounces of fat round beef costing 15 cents.

Fifteen ounces boneless codfish costing 14 cents.
Six and a half ounces of white bread costing 2½ cents.
Five ounces cornmeal costing one cent.
Four pounds and two ounces of cabbage costing ten cents.
Five ounces of dried beans costing 2 cents.
Eight oranges costing 23 cents.
One dozen apples costing 9 cents.
Five bananas costing 5 cents.
Six and a half ounces of prunes costing 6 cents.
Four and a half ounces of walnuts costing 17 cents.

THE MAINE LOBSTER.

From the Boston Transcript.

"One of the questions that is sure to come up for consideration at each recurring session of the Maine legislature is that of better protection for what is called the "vanishing lobster." Many plans to accomplish this purpose have been proposed, one of them a close period of from one to five years during which no lobster could be legally taken even for home consumption. The Portland Advertiser has become quite worked-up over such a proposition. In the first place, it does not admit that the lobster is vanishing, and to close the market for them would be to drive elsewhere the summer boarders now one of the State's best assets, who want lobsters and will have lobsters, if money will buy them. It makes a tentative suggestion, which, however, it does not press, that there might be a law which would forbid the exportation of lobsters from the State. But even better than that would be uniform laws upon the question in Nova Scotia, Maine, New Hampshire and Massachusetts.

"It entertains a grievance against these states last named. 'The present conditions,' it declares, 'cause constant detriment to the industry,' from the fact that Massachusetts and New Hampshire fishing smacks come into Maine waters and purchase at very low rates lobsters which are under the legal length in Maine but are salable in the other states, where anything over nine and a half inches goes. Thus there are thousands upon thousand of lobsters to which Maine feels entitled that escape since less exacting markets than her own are so near. The State finds it almost as difficult to enforce her lobster law as her prohibitionary law, since it would require a warden for every lobsterman' were strict compliance attempted. As a consequence it 'makes criminals out of hundreds of lobster men who offend in no other manner, but men cannot be made to believe that it is a crime to take from the mighty ocean that which the Creator placed therein.'

"Maine has the most sea coast of any of the North Atlantic States and it is very favorable to lobster growing. She can hardly be blamed for wishing to conserve this source of wealth which is so vital to her pre-eminence as a state of summer boarders, but as long as there is a market elsewhere for lobsters which her laws forbid to be sold the outside traffic will hardly be checked. It is thought that uniform laws would solve the case. Why not make her requirements the same as those of New Hampshire and Massachusetts.

DAIRYING DOES ALL THIS.

From the Blue Valley Bulletin.

Dairying brings in a regular income. The cream producer has cash to do business with and saves money by being able to pay cash as he goes along.

Dairying gives employment on the farm the year round and profitable employment too.

Dairying enables the farmer to diversify his crops and adopt better farming methods generally.

Dairying causes the farmer to look well to the comfort of all his farm animals consequently he makes more money out of all of them.

Dairying offers big inducements to the progressive farmer. The difference in production between good and poor cows is so great that there is abundant opportunity for improvement all the time.

Dairying makes a better farmer of a man who studies the business. In no other branch of farming is so much thought and skill required and no other branch returns better profits if thought and skill are used.

PLANT CEREAL MILK AND CREAM.

The following is from an article contributed to the Ice Cream Trade Journal by Theodore Lange who has been connected with various prominent milk companies during the past thirty years:

This is the day of synthetic chemistry. It is the promise of a day not so far distant when many foods necessary for man will be prepared in the laboratory, and which will be as good or better than those produced by nature. A scientific promise of this is found in the recent production of milk from cereals, already perfected to such a degree that it contains the same ingredients as cow's milk and is so similar in taste and appearance to require almost an expert to tell it from the natural product.

The new milk is the discovery of a German scientist. All other points being equal, a vegetable milk is superior to an animal product, aside from its food value, because it can be made free from filth and the possibility of disease germs.

Milk has been a universal article of food since memory of man and will remain so so long as mother earth is inhabited by mankind.

It is a fact that no other article of food, excepting milk, contains all the essentials of a perfect ration: proteids, carbohydrates, fats, inorganic salts and water. In addition its facility of ingestion and comparative ease of digestion make milk especially adapted as a food for the sick and convalescent, and the only satisfactory substitute for mother's milk in infant feeding.

Millions of cows are raised with the main object of supplying milk. The ever increasing price of food has caused a high price of beef with the natural result that the number of cows kept for milk has not kept pace with the increasing demand. The food of the cow and the conditions under which the cow is kept are of vital importance to mankind. Unfortunately these conditions vary greatly, and it is the uncertainty of the wholesomeness of the milk, which is bringing about more rigid inspection and more exacting requirements by boards of health.

Continuous inbreeding and the removal of the animals from pastures of plains or mountains, from grass and running brooks to artificial housing, and forced milk production have been attended with dire results. The natural consequence is that the cow thus transferred from natural surroundings soon shows symptoms of disease, particularly tuberculosis.

It has been proved that bovine tuberculosis may be transmitted to human beings. Other diseases, like anthrax, visit the dairy farm. The dairy farmer has had a hard time in other ways. The price of feeds has gone up, and the profits of milk production have grown smaller and smaller. These facts coupled with the allurement of the price of beef, have recently induced many farmers to sell their cows and today the nation faces an ever growing decrease in the number of dairy cows. The shortage of milk, the attendant prices, together with the great danger of infected and unclean and adulterated milk caused scientists of the world to study the possibility of producing a substitute for cow's milk. The great majority of those trying to solve the problem, after varying experiments, came to the conclusion that the real solution lay in the plant world.

The reason for this is simple and easily understood. The world produces yearly crops of enormous quantities. The most important part of these crops are the cereals which can be stored not only until the next crop appears, but for years. The uniformly adequate crops of cereals have not advanced as much in price as food of animal origin. It is self-evident that the much needed substitute for animal milk must originate in a material which has to come exclusively from the plant world.

All milk substitutes in existence are partially based upon products from animals, and are therefore high priced and unavailable as milk substitute for this reason; they are also not in the right form to be used as a milk substitute for all purposes for which milk is used.

As a real milk substitute can only be possible from the plant world, the question arises can this source produce a liquid similar in appearance, taste and nutritive value to milk? Plants themselves answer this question. Many plants growing in moderate climates (euforbiaccen) discharge, when cut, a liquid similar to animal milk and in Brazil and Mexico enormously tall trees are found which discharge, when the bark is cut, a liquid similar to animal milk in such quantities that the article is used by the inhabitants of these countries as a food. Humboldt said that among all the discoveries he made during his travels the milk producing trees were the most surprising wonder of nature.

Besides, the milk-like substances produced by plants, we know of other milk-like substances produced in the laboratory, for instance, the milk of almond. We also know that a variety of nuts growing in moderate climates are suitable to produce a milk-like fluid. Among the products of the tropics are the cocoanut and the palm seed, from which a pleasant tasting milk-like fluid can be extracted. Research established the fact that while it is possible to produce from these fruits, a fat containing a milk-like liquid, it contains no albumen and albumen cannot be imparted to it. So the problem of producing a perfect animal milk substitute from plants can only be solved if plant albumen in the right form and in sufficient quantities can be found in a plant which grows and is cultivated all over the world.

After six years of research, Dr. Gustav von Rigler, professor of Hygiene at the University of Klausenburg, Austria-Hungary, has found this plant albumen.

With this discovery before him he proceeded to solve the following problems:

(1) To find a practical way to produce this albumen of the necessary purity in large quantities.

(2) Of transforming this plant albumen into identical condition as the albumen in animal milk, i. e., in a partly swelled and dissolved state.

(3) To discover a method of emulsifying the plant albumen with plant fat, just as fat is found emulsified in animal milk.

After long and careful experiments, Professor Rigler has solved these problems. After this was accomplished it was an easy matter to produce in this emulsion all other substances of which animal milk is composed and to produce a plant cereal milk identical with animal milk in nutritive value, and nearly so in taste, but far superior in cleanliness.

The great problem how to produce a milk free from pathogenic germs, which has occupied the minds of government and other expert chemists, physicians, law makers, etc., in fact, a problem in which all of the people of the world have been interested, is now absolutely solved. Scientific tests as well as practical use have proven:

(1) That this new plant cereal milk is absolutely free from any substance injurious to health.

(2) That on account of its absolute freedom from pathogenic germs alive or dead, it is far superior to cow's milk.

(3) That it has as high a nutritive value as cow's milk.

Each of these points have been actually proved and demonstrated by chemical analysis and medical observation and tests made in large modern hospitals. These tests further proved:

(a) The sick as well as healthy individuals all readily partake of plant cereal milk, and can rarely distinguish it from cow's milk.

(b) That the nutritive value of plant cereal milk for industrial and kitchen use is superior to cow's milk.

(c) That no infectious disease will be spread by this product.

(d) That it can be produced cheaper than cow's milk.

Many persons who have had an opportunity to taste it and have used it plain or in tea, coffee, cocoa, etc., have expressed a preference for its taste as compared with cow's milk. The absence of the cow smell, so obnoxious to many people, is noticed immediately.

Plant cereal milk is sterile when drawn from the machine direct into the sterilized vessel or bottle. Everything is done by machinery. At no time in the process of production, or in the finished product, are any live or dead bacteria present. Other advantages of the milk are:

(1) Unlimited production.

(2) Regulation from day to day of supply and demand, consequently no shortage at certain seasons of the year and consequently no fluctuation in price.

(3) Easy supervision of manufacture and inspection by Federal, State and city authorities.

(4) Plant cereal milk can be produced in fluid, semi-fluid, or condensed form.

(5) It can be canned.

(6) Nutritive value and price make it a food for the masses.

(7) All fermented milks can be produced from cereal milk by adding the respective bacteria.

(8) Plant cereal milk without the addition of sugar has been used by diabetics with great success.

FISH VS. MEAT.

In a recent Bulletin the New York City Board of Health gives some figures to convince the average American that this diet of meat is not necessary, for that the protein, or muscle-making element, is just as easily obtained from fish, which is much less expensive. Here are the Board of Health figures:

FISH.

Haddock contains 18 per cent. protein; sells for 7 cents a pound.
Herring contains 19 per cent. protein; sells for 8 cents a pound.
Bluefish contains 19 per cent. protein; sells for 10 cents a pound.
Codfish contains 18 per cent. protein; sells for 12 cents a pound.
Eels contain 18 per cent. protein; sells for 15 cents a pound.

BEEF.

Chuck contains 19 per cent. protein; sells for 24 cents a pound.
Rump contains 19 per cent. protein; sells for 28 cents a pound.
Round contains 21 per cent. protein; sells for 28 cents a pound.
Sirloin steak contains 19 per cent. protein; sells for 30 cents a pound.
Ribs contain 18 per cent. protein; sells for 26 cents a pound.

The trouble with fish in most households, remarks the Oysterman and Fisherman, is that it is improperly cooked. In most New York restaurants it is better cooked than at home. Fish is easy to cook but you must know how. When a cook who is proud of his skill wants to give you something new and tasty, the chances are that he will select a dish of which fish is the basis.

This country is so rich in sea food of all sorts that there is no excuse for any American housekeeper not knowing how to serve it in a hundred appetizing ways.

UTILIZING BY-PRODUCTS OF CREAMERIES.

According to the Creamery and Milk Plant Monthly it has been said that a European family can live on what an American family throws away. Of course, in that statement, truth is sacrificed to epigram, and the result is exaggeration and while it may have been more nearly true in former years, it is so no longer in these days of greater compulsory economy. But still the saying embodies a great amount of truth. There are some industries, indeed, which commit little waste at least in the utilization of the raw materials, like the meat packing industry. But in many others the waste continues. This waste is particularly great in an industry consisting of small units. In a large factory the waste amounts to so much that notwithstanding its comparatively low cost it represents large economic values and money can be made by working it up into by-products. In a small factory it is far more difficult to find lucrative employment for waste material. Hence, by-products are more common in big manufacturing units while waste is more common in little ones where the loss can be least afforded.

The two chief waste products—more or less waste, at least—of the milk industry are buttermilk and skim milk. In the aggregate the values wasted by the failure to use them, or at least to use them to the best advantage, are colossal. To lessen their waste, to find means to utilize these products, in the smaller creameries particularly, is work deserving the most serious attention of our technical and scientific men.

A valuable contribution to the solution to this question is made by the Wisconsin Agricultural Experiment Station, through Mr. J. L. Sammis. Mr. Sammis describes in detail the methods of utilizing the buttermilk at creameries in producing an article of food—buttermilk cheese—which, with proper marketing will undoubtedly go far toward eking out the income of the creameries and possibly turning an unprofitable business into a well-paying one. The fact that this cheese is preferred by bakers for cheese cake over cottage cheese is alone an inducement of the greatest value.

The problem of utilizing skim milk still remain largely unsolved. A great deal may perhaps be done in popularizing its use for food and eradicating the common prejudice against it. But probably the ultimate and decisive solution will come with the expansion of the condensed and dried milk business. The great advantage this mode of disposition has over city delivery is that the cost of shipping packing, and distributing is practically eliminated, and the material can be handled in bulk from creamery to condensory or milk powder factory.

EGGS THAT RATTLE.

Nothing is further from the truth than the wide-spread feeling and belief that eggs which rattle are bad, or at least not hatchable. Visit any country store and you can see people trying to test eggs in this way. If an egg rattles it is laid aside and the eggs that do not rattle are selected.

Our experiences in selling eggs have shown just how wide-spread is the idea. Many of our customers, especially foreigners, believe that an egg which rattles is bad. Just as when eggs are tested by dropping them into water to see if they will float, the rule does not work. An egg that has the least chip or crack, not apparent at the first glance will usually float—the supposed sign of a bad egg.

More foolish is the practice of some farmers who shake their eggs vigorously before placing them to hatch. This is positively harmful as the shaking tends to destroy the germ life. It does not tell whether or not the eggs will hatch but tends to make the eggs unhatchable. Eggs that are shipped a long distance will not hatch as well as eggs that have been distributed and rattled about. Sending eggs through the parcel post tends to shake the germ life out of them, and for that reason I imagine that an experiment would show that eggs sent through the parcel post would not average as high in the number hatched as those that have been kept from shaking and jostling in transit.

It pays to give eggs a fair chance. Some persons will throw away two or three eggs out of a dozen because they accidentally break the yellow when they open them. Think of the loss that is occasioned each year by just such a little thing as this.—Mel Ryder, Jefferson County, Ohio, in Ohio Farmer.

IMPORTANT TO STIR MILK IN CANS DURING COOLING.

The milk in the top of the can just above the water level in the cooling vat cools much more slowly than the milk that is below that level, according to experiments by the United States Dairy Division. The warmer milk in the top of the can does not circulate naturally with the cool milk at the bottom. The cold milk being heavier than the warm will remain at the bottom of the can, while the warmer and therefore lighter portion will remain at the top, and practically no circulation will take place. The transfer of the heat in this case is very slow; moreover, the milk around the sides of the can cools much more quickly than that in the center of the can. It therefore is important to stir the milk while cooling.

In experiments made with cans where the top of the milk was above the water level, it was found that the milk above the water level remains from five to six degrees warmer than the portion below the level. Bacteria consequently will develop at a higher rate in the top of the milk, and later when the milk is mixed the souring of the whole canful will be hastened both by reducing the temperature of the whole and also by the increased number of bacteria in the warmer portion.

In the experiments all the cans were cooled by the same method. The milk in some of the cans was stirred every fifteen minutes while that in the others was not. The water in the cooling tank was 62.6 degrees F. The milk that was stirred cooled from nearly 90 degrees to slightly above 60 in three hours. The unstirred milk did not get down to a similar temperature for four hours and fifteen minutes. Meanwhile in the unstirred milk all the milk above the water level in the running water was from five to six degrees warmer. The comparatively rapid decrease in the temperature when the milk was thoroughly stirred at intervals of fifteen minutes demonstrates the advantages of agitating the milk while cooling. The advantage of stirring is emphasized by the fact that at the time the milk is stirred the temperature of the room was over six degrees warmer than was the case when the unstirred milk was put into the running water. The time taken to cool the milk in either case, however, is too great for good results, and the test served best to demonstrate the necessity of employing some form of milk cooler suitable for farm use and more efficient than running well water.

Where ice is plentiful and may be had at nominal cost it is easy to reduce the temperature to 40 degrees F. This may be done by running the milk or cream over some form of cooler around which cracked ice, or a mixture of ice and salt is placed, or through which ice water is circulated.

Where the milk is placed in cans and set merely in cold water, or even in a tank filled with ice water, the cooling goes on very slowly, especially if the cans are large.

ADVANTAGES OF BOTTLING PASTEURIZED MILK WHILE HOT.

Investigators in the United States Department of Agriculture have found that the process of bottling pasteurized milk while still hot has several advantages which make it seem probable that this method would prove both economical and efficacious when practiced on a commercial scale. It is stated that this method results in bacterial reductions as great, or even greater than by pasteurization in bottles.

The principal advantage of the latter method for the ordinary systems in commercial use is the impossibility of the milk becoming contaminated again while being bottled. There is also some saving of milk, because there is no loss from evaporation. On the other hand when milk is pasteurized in bottles, it is customary to cool the bottles by placing them in cold water. This necessitates the use of absolutely water tight caps, otherwise some of the cold water is likely to find its way into the milk bottles, and even a very slight leak may result in contamination. Water-proof caps are not only expensive, but care is essential to see that they are absolutely water-tight, and moreover, bottles with chipped or otherwise damaged tops cannot be used, no matter how nearly perfect the cap may be.

Laboratory experiments conducted by the investigators indicate that milk may be pasteurized, bottled hot, capped with ordinary cardboard caps and cooled by a blast of cold air economically and with very satisfactory bacterial reductions. The air cooling process requires a somewhat longer time than cooling by water, but in the laboratory it was found that thoroughly pasteurized milk, bottled immediately, could be cooled slowly without increasing the bacterial content. Whether or not the experience of the laboratory will be found true in commercial practice, remains to be seen.

The Department of Agriculture, it is announced, will conduct experiment with a view to determining this important point. Before the milk is poured into them, the bottles should be steamed for two minutes, the authors are careful to point out. This removes all danger of infecting the milk from the bottles and is another advantage that this new method possesses.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

According to the Canadian Fisherman there is no doubt about it, that fish is becoming more of a regular diet than formerly. People are beginning to eat more fish, and within the last month we have noticed a number of articles in newspapers scattered throughout the country advocating the use of fish in place of meat. Publicity is what the fish business needs to create a demand and publicity of the right sort is not to be had without spending money. With the war causing people to cut down living expenses, the present is a good time to start advertising fish. It will pay in the long run, remarks the Oysterman and Fisherman.

The Trade—Something of the task the world has before it is beginning to be seen in the demands from Europe for all kinds of goods and supplies; and in this case "the world" largely means the United States. All the warring nations are seeking our goods and getting them. They will get such quantities of foods that America will have nothing left but canned goods to eat a consummation predicted at the outbreak of the war, but laughed at by many as an impossibility. We cannot continue shipping meat and wheat, potatoes and beans and other such foods without missing them, and when they are missed other things must take their place—and that is the same as saying canned goods.

Exports of meat from the Argentine Republic continue on a liberal scale, shipments during one week amounting to 30,000 quarters frozen and chilled beef, 6,000 carcasses of mutton and 6,000 carcasses lamb. Since January first exports total 662,000 quarters beef, 109,000 carcasses mutton and 76,000 carcasses lamb.

Mrs. J. J. McGraw, wife of one of the most practical farmers in Yazoo County, Mississippi, having been successful in canning all kinds of fruits and vegetables, two years ago conceived the idea that butter could be canned and kept fresh for any length of time. So she made a trial of canning butter, and as was the case with the vegetables and fruits, is reported to have made a success of it. On all the sandwiches served at a recent luncheon there was spread a good layer of this two-year-old butter and it was pronounced excellent.

Prof. R. A. Pearson, president of the Iowa State College of Agriculture, and former Commissioner of Agriculture of New York, is at the head of a great body of young men interested in farming. He says that the Iowa State College now has 2,400 students. The freshman class numbers 1,140. There in the college 570 women. About 300 more students are expected to enroll during the year. Counting these and the summer session attendance last year our total for the year is practically 3,200. With the winter course added it will exceed 4,000.

Director Harte, of the Bureau of Health and Charities, of Philadelphia, in referring to the foot and mouth disease, referred to the recent new rules passed by the Quaker City authorities, requiring the pasteurization of all milk sold or distributed in Philadelphia. Among other things he said: "Although it caused some unfavorable criticism from the smaller dairy interests of this city, in face of the present epidemic among cattle, the pasteurization rule scored its first big victory. Philadelphia is safeguarding against the disease attacking young or old in this municipality. With the pasteurization of milk, and the other safeguards established by the Board of Health it is not at all likely that any contaminated milk will reach Philadelphia."

According to T. Z. Richey, in the Pennsylvania Farmer, milk is the best egg food that can be fed to old hens. Given all the milk they will consume, hens will lay in season and out of season. The farmer who feeds his hens either skim of buttermilk, need not worry about balanced rations. The hens will do the balancing and will do it much better than the farmer could do it himself.

A correspondent of the Pennsylvania Farmer says: Two years ago the writer worked out to his own satisfaction the relative value of skim milk and beef scrap as egg foods for hens. Two pens of twelve hens each were made up. The only difference in feeding practiced, was that one pen received beef scrap while those in the other pen received all the skim milk they would eat. The hens having constant access to the milk laid one-third more eggs than hens getting the beef scrap.

The contract for supplying milk to be used by the various institutions maintained by the city of Philadelphia during the year 1915 has been awarded by the Department of Supplies to John A. Barry, whose bids on two of the largest items, one of 1,200,000 quarts of milk for the Bureau of Charities and the milk to be used by the Philadelphia Hospital for Contagious Diseases, were notably lower than last year's prices. Mr. Barry's bid for the Bureau of Charities was five and one-fourth cents a quart, as against five and one-half cents a quart during 1914; while his bid of 28 cents a quart for the cream for the Hospital for Contagious Diseases is two cents a quart lower than last year.

According to the last census there are 21,000,000 dairy cows in the United States. It has been figured out that it costs in some sections just 49 cents less than $62 to get a calf to her two-year-old form. These figures are claimed to be based on data obtained from raising 117 cattle from birth to the time they entered the dairy herd. These figures show the extent of the business of raising cattle, and that it does not pay to raise scrub calves and sell them from $25 to $40 apiece. The most expensive period in the life of a calf is the first four weeks, the cost being nearly double that for any other four weeks period. This high cost is occasioned by its being almost entirely dependent upon whole milk. And the scrub calf will take just as much milk as the best one.

Boston Globe: To attempt to increase the demand for fish along the seacoast and to widen the market for the same inland without a liberal use of printer's ink is as idle as it is for one to try to lift himself by his bootstraps. Certain rules of busines success are as inexorable as are the laws of physics. Producers of breakfast cereals, ready-to-eat soups, etc., who advertise systematically and intelligently in the daily press do not complain that the market for their goods is restricted. If the average amount of fish consumed in Massachusetts is under twelve ounces a person a week, as has been declared, and much less in states away from the ocean, the reason lies in the fact that the value of it as a food, which really is high has never been properly presented to the public through advertisements well displayed. Advertising will sell cod and haddock as well as dress goods and real estate.

The United States Department of Agriculture, it is estimated, by the Government financiers, will require nearly $21,000,000 to pay its running expenses for the year 1915. Among the items for which the department asks is $87,000 for dairy experiments in the semi-arid and irrigated regions of the west; $600,000 for foot and mouth disease quarantine work, $60,000 for live stock experiments in southern sections where sugar cane has been the principal product, and $398,000 to fight the cattle tick in the South.

According to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat ice cream was invented by a negro named Jackson. Jackson kept a confectionery store in the early eighties, down in the sleepy old home of the most famous ice cream of the country—Philadelphia. Jackson used to make a specialty of making cold custards for the ladies and gentlemen who used to frequent his store in the summer months. He found that it was easy to thoroughly chill the custard by placing it on ice for a few hours. Experimenting further he found that by covering a vessel full of custard with broken ice for some hours, the custard became a semi-frozen mass which was most cooling and delicious. So successful was he with his custard that he used to sell it for $1 a quart. His product brought him a fortune.

The Pennsylvania Railroad is developing rapidly its milk territory. According to the Milk Reporter milk trains on fast schedules will be running by January 1. Depots have been established at Jersey City and in Long Island City. The action of this road will prevent any possibility of a scarcity of milk this winter, owing to the supply tapped by this company. A year ago the department was established, and since that time agents of the company have interested dealers and farmers on the Pennsylvania lines.

The official Dun report of the November failures shows a very surprising increase in the failures in most lines, general stores showing the greatest, the November, 1914, number being just about twice as great as the failures of general stores in 1913.
